Could anything have prevented an Omaha man from killing his beloved grandmother?

By Ryan Lenz

Nearly a decade ago, a young man was arrested for a crime that left his grandmother dead. Her body was found in her home in Omaha, Nebraska, with her throat cut and her hands bound. The man, who was 19 at the time, was charged with murder and sent to prison for life.

Over the years, his family tried to understand what had happened.

Tina Mangan, the daughter of the victim, recalled her mother:

> "She was a very, very, very,
