The "Bug"

Adventure. Culture. Serendipity. We often use these words to describe the "travel bug," or simply the "bug," as long-time travelers refer to it. It's a constant desire to experience something different—an addiction to the thrill of life unfiltered. Whether exploring one's own backyard for the first time or crossing the globe to an exotic location, there's one thing that all travelers with the "bug" have in common: a curiosity about the world around them. The people featured in our catalogs all have the "bug". We've found them out in the world nursing their habit: volunteering in dusty outposts, traversing the Andes on rundown buses, and making short films off the coast of East Africa.

For our Spring/Summer 2013 photo shoot, we sent some of these travelers to test our garments on a dream journey through Australia's most well kept secret: the state of South Australia. We laughed as Mari Gray hopped along with a rescue kangaroo on Kangaroo Island. We sweated while Yann Mourier trekked across a seemingly red-painted desert in the Outback's mid-summer swelter. We swallowed our nerves while dodging dingos and emus at Wilpena Pound during takeoff in a small Cessna airplane. And off the coast the Fleurieu Peninsula, we grinned from ear-to-ear throughout a three-day sail to hidden beaches aboard Lady Eugenie, a classic 75-foot ketch.

Along the way, the clothing quickly became secondary to our travelers' curiosity. And that's how it should be. We design our garments to get out of the way; they're lightweight, quick drying, and insect and sun repellent. Because at ExOfficio, we believe that your "bug" should always come first.

Mari Gray

Mari was born in Guatemala, and grew up in California and Japan. Every summer her family would travel somewhere new, giving her a taste for adventure at a young age. She has worked on a farm in Belize, became a dive master in Honduras, and taught English in the Galapagos. Travel, according to Mari, is essential for her well-being.

Mari Gray cuddles with her new best friend Gypsy, a rescue and resident of the Rustic Blue Art Gallery, located on Kangaroo Island, South Australia.

The Human Factor

When you return home from your travels, you might have souvenirs or photos from the beautiful places you visited. But the stories you bring back will be about the people you met along the way. Whether they are locals or fellow travelers, people make an adventure memorable. Your tour guide might teach you the local slang. A woman in the market might invite you home for a traditional dinner. These moments are the reason we travel. To learn, grow, and experience the joy of connecting with others, even if they live on the other side of the world.

Mari Gray and Yann Mourier enjoy some good company and local vintage at Kangaluna Bush Camp in the Gawler Ranges of South Australia.
