

'Resurrection' Review: A Claustrophobic Thriller Elevates Off The Performances From Rebecca Hall And Tim Roth | Sundance 2022

Posted by Murjani Rawls | Jan 26, 2022 | Film Reviews, Reviews | 0 | ★★★★★

At first look, it appears Margaret (Rebecca Hall) has it all. She works as a biologist in an upscale, cozy office and lives in a roomy, modern home. She's entangled in an affair with a married man named Peter (Michael Esper), to which Margaret has clearly defined the sexual boundaries to follow. Abby (Grace Kaufman), her teenage daughter, is getting ready to go away to college. Naturally, there's some trepidation a single mother's only child is about to leave the nest — but overall, life is good. During a late-night get-together, Margaret divulges to Peter that she used to love drawing — an activity that she hadn't done in almost 18 years. It's mighty peculiar for somebody to drop a beloved hobby for that long, but in the unsettling mystery of Resurrection, even the most minor behaviors have a backstory.

Writer-director Andrew Semans isn't going to hand the answer to the psychological riddle that easily. Odd things happen, like Abby finding a human tooth in her wallet. Now, that seems like a very random event, but the slow crawl of hysteria forms in Margaret's mind — further compounded by a sudden accident to Abby later. Like any parent, they want to keep their children safe, and it seems the prospect of Abby being in a different place is starting to hit Margaret. However, at a conference, she catches a glance of a face from the past. David (Tim Roth) seems innocent, but his presence loosens something inside Margaret—sending her off in a panic.

Delivered in a captivating monologue by Hall to Gwyn (Angela Wong Carbone), an intern she gives relationship advice to—the fog of her past clears. Soon, the film turns into a cat-and-mouse chess match between Margaret and David. Is he appearing in these places she goes, or is it a repressed memory of a traumatic past jarred loose by sudden stress? Resurrection could go down a path of the least resistance; however, it ventures down a road where the most improbable conclusion is possible. Wyatt Garfield's cinematography, which shifts between surreal nightmare and escalating paranoia, joins with an excellent performance from Hall. We discover Margaret and David were in a previous relationship when she turned 18 — complete with a multitude of events of emotional abuse and physical challenges called "kindnesses," leaving her with physical scars.

Roth's calm demeanor is unsettling — cascading as someone who claims to operate with Margaret's best interest in mind. He's an anxiety trigger and a key to a dark secret. When his gaze turns to Abby, Margaret unravels further — electing to go into full overprotective mode. But who can she turn to for support? Resurrection leaves enough room to make it seem like Margaret is an unreliable narrator, even though it's indisputable that these events occurred. Could the emotional asphyxiation be from Abby's impending departure and the realization that Margaret's steady fixture going out of place? That could be another reason. But with nobody to turn to, Margaret falls back into the painful physical pillars consistent in her abusive relationship in hopes David leaves.

Hall's physicality morphs into the desperation pushed upon her by the cold and calculating David — often imbued with tired eyes and aching bones. There seems to be only one conclusion Resurrection could go, but even that subverts any expectations. Margaret is a toy David has claimed ownership of, but Margaret's independence is in a war with the panic she experiences protecting the thing she loves most. While the film could have just focused on a parent's anxiety to a growing teenager and a woman's trauma as a basis for a Hitchcock-like slow-burn nightmare, the conclusion doesn't take the easy way out. Because a union like this could only end up at a gruesome end — one that's worth enjoying the twists and turns.

Read our reviews from Sundance 2022 here.

SHARE: f t g+ t p in v u e RATE: ★★★★★

< PREVIOUS

NEXT >

The Princess' Review: The Use of Only Archival Footage Gives A Story We Know A Platform Which Resonates Today | Sundance 2022

Shinedown announce 'Planet Zero' + release title-track

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Murjani Rawls

Journalist, Self-published author of five books, podcast host of The War Report and The Deadscreen Podcast, and photographer since 2014, Murjani "MJ" Rawls has been stretching his capabilities of his creativity and passions, Rawls has as a portfolio spanning through many mediums including music, television, movies, and more. Operating out of the New York area, Rawls has photographed over 200+ artists spanning many genres, written over 700 articles ranging displaying his passionate aspirations to keep evolving as his years in media continue.

RELATED POSTS

Santigold is still golden 10 years later

May 28, 2019

REVIEW: Tonight Alive master their sound on 'Underworld'

Jan 9, 2018

'Radius' is a brilliantly written film that somewhat fumbles its execution

Nov 8, 2017

'I Feel Pretty' means well but never quite reaches its goals

Apr 19, 2018

TODAY'S HEADLINES

Interpol announce first four dates in two years
Jan 27, 2022 | News

Shinedown announce 'Planet Zero' + release title-track
Jan 27, 2022 | Featured, News

'Resurrection' Review: A Claustrophobic Thriller Elevates Off The Performances From Rebecca Hall and Tim Roth | Sundance 2022
Jan 26, 2022 | Film Reviews, Reviews

'The Princess' Review: The Use of Only Archival Footage Gives A Story We Know A Platform Which Resonates Today | Sundance 2022
Jan 26, 2022 | Film Reviews, Reviews

PREMIERE: Toronto Pop Artist Chiara Young Releases New Pop Banger "Stupid Happy"
Jan 26, 2022 | Music

FOLLOW US

RECENT REVIEWS

NYFF Review: 'The Tragedy of Macbeth' Is An Adaptation Fit To Hold the Weight of A Heavy Crown
SCORE: 93%

TIFF Review: 'Dashcam' Provides A Rabid Found Footage Experience With Obstacles In Front and Behind the Camera
SCORE: 40%

TIFF Review: 'Silent Night' Is A Tenebrious Christmas Comedy That Stands At the Edge of World's End
SCORE: 70%

'Dear Evan Hansen' Review: An Overall Message That Can't Fight Through the Tapping of the Glass
SCORE: 45%

'The Conjuring: The Devil Made Me Do It' Contains Scares You Know and Combines the Supernatural and Legal Worlds
SCORE: 75%

RECENT VIDEOS

NO VIDEO FOUND

Joe Occhiuti of Ice Nine Kills Lists Eight Underrated Bands From Boston

Valleyheart releases new video single and video "Scenery"

ABOUT US

Substream Magazine is a forward thinking lifestyle and media outlet that focuses on discovering and sharing the best in new music, film, pop culture, and entertainment. Since 2007, Substream has helped break artists and launch cutting edge content Our writers and staff are located all over the world and are passionate about music and pop culture.

FOLLOW US

