

Ceria Brewing Co - Grainwave Belgian-Style White

Introduction

Ceria Brewing Company from Denver, Colorado, presents their take on a Belgian-Style White Ale. Grainwave promises to be a dark-colored, denser-bodied drink with a sweet taste offset by citrus. How well does Ceria Brewing Company really do with the Belgian-style brew?

Ceria Brewing Co. Grainwave Belgian-Style White

Ceria Brewing Company is a forward-thinking industry leader in innovation when it comes to non-alcoholic beers. They were born where the non-alcoholic craft beer brewing revolution and the curious sobriety trend met.

The company was founded in 2018, and their Grainwave Belgian-Style White promises to be a refreshing new spin on an old classic. It is made to be a full-bodied great-tasting alternative to alcoholic beers for people who choose to live a healthy and active lifestyle.

Grainwave is delicate and sweet. This is balanced by the slight bitterness of the citrus provided by blood-red orange peel and is enhanced by notes of coriander.

It even promises anti-inflammatory and anti-anxiety action induced by its terpenes, limonene, and linalool. These are natural elements of the brew's spices.

How is Ceria Brewing Co. Grainwave Belgian-Style White?

Ceria Brewing Company dealcoholizes their beer. This is a process where the alcohol is removed in the late stages of the brewing process or after the process is finished. The alcohol is then filtered from the beer.

The specifics of the brewing process that Ceria Brewing Company uses to brew Grainwave Belgian-Style White are a trade secret. Their proprietary method protects the integrity and quality of their non-alcoholic brews.

Can You Drink Ceria Brewing Co Grainwave Belgian-Style White While Pregnant Or Breastfeeding?

The choice to drink a non-alcoholic beer while pregnant or breastfeeding is a personal choice that you should discuss with your doctor. There has never been a large-scale study done on the effects of negligible amounts of alcohol on pregnancy and breastfeeding; therefore, there is no scientific answer to this question.

Because experts recommend not drinking any alcohol during pregnancy and breastfeeding, many people decide to err on the side of caution and not partake in non-alcoholic beers. Other people feel that the amount of alcohol (less than that in a glass of warm orange juice) is so small that it doesn't matter.

The same advice would apply to people who have medical conditions or take medications that could be affected by alcohol. Speak to your doctor about your specific situation if you want to be sure. Non-alcoholic beer might be a good option for you.

What Do Drinkers Think Of Ceria Brewing Co Grainwave Belgian-Style White?

Ceria Brewing Co Grainwave Belgian-Style White pours a hazy medium to light orange color with a short head that doesn't last long. It appears to have good carbonation, and almost everyone gets notes of orange and malt in the aroma. The smell is fantastic for a non-alcoholic beer, which are often known to have odd aromas.

The taste of orange and citrus comes through, and most people taste the notes of coriander as well. Drinkers also mention hints of wheat and clove. The body is reported to be medium to light.

Most drinkers like this beer and would have it again. It is reported to be a solid non-alcoholic beer option.

When To Drink

Grainwave Belgian-Style White is a delicate, light, and refreshing beer that goes well with almost any salad course. Try it also with cheese; a good choice is a hearty and nutty cheese such as Gruyere. It goes well with almost any chicken dish, but especially those that are a bit spicier.

This beer is so well balanced that it works well in any season. It can be a light beer for a salad or dessert course in the winter or a refreshing option in the summer heat.
