On a lighter note

What's a potatoes least favourite day of the week?

Fry-day!

The month of June has been a cold month and we are happy that it's past us now and July has welcomed us with some long-awaited sunshine. Let's hope it lasts...

Farmer of the month

Our farmer of the month is Mr Macquire.

We installed a standard tunnel for him. It's already been put to good use and he's farming a range of crops. The produce looks healthy and we are looking forward to seeing more of this in the near future.

Organic food is the healthier option because of what it doesn't have: pesticides and preservatives.

Frost Protection

Winter is generally a difficult month to farm due to the harsh weather crops are exposed to. They are vulnerable to frost which destroys & hampers growth which affects your expected yield. Fortunately for you, if you happen to find yourself in this situation there's a solution to salvage your hard work— nappy liners.

Nappy liners

Liner being layed down

It acts like a blanket, that you spread along your beds which covers the crop and protects it against those unforgiving winter days. Hoops can be used to create a tunnel-like structure which is useful for crops that grow vertically like tomatoes and peppers. You can cover the row by laying it directly on the crop with no damage to the produce. If you're laying the cover directly on the ground, make sure you leave enough space for crop growth.

The edges can be sealed by using sandbags or soil. Greencon stocks nappy liners, so if you're in need of some contact us.

Pro tip

You can use wire/pvc pipes to make the hoops yourself.

Some things you might have missed

We're excited about the work we've done on the website in the last month and we would love for you to check it out by following this link.

What to look forward to

In the month of July we will be launching our blog, which will have some fresh farming content, tips & techniques for both seasoned and new farmers. So be sure to visit our website and stay up to date.

Thank you to all our valued customers for your continued support and hoping for a fruitful 2nd half of 2020.

End.
