6/17 Stand Up Punch Up Jun 17, 2019

Once a woman finds out on a date that I do stand-up, the first thing she says is "I hope you don't talk about this on stage." That, or she asks for the check.

I've been online dating. I tried to boycott them for the longest time, and instead meet women in real life. Like at a bar and talk to them like humans. But every time I approach an attractive one, they respond with "hey, I hate talking on these things. Add me on Kik."

But us nerds – we haven't done too badly. Jon went to NYU Law, and I went to Duke Law, and we both went on to lose our souls. Jon is a badass IP litigation partner for Kirkland, and when he's not billing a million hours or traveling frequently to the West Coast for his tech clients – he takes time out to really enjoy the finer things in life: being away from his family.

But also, he has quite the liquor collection. It's so extensive you would think he's either opening a bar, or raising the bar for alcoholism. Neither is true – he's a bottle collector, particularly whiskeys, and I'm proud to say I've made more than a dent in his collection. Jon, thank you for all the fancy drinks at your place. I would have tipped more, but you're awful at pouring drinks and have no idea how to flirt with patrons.
