

Help talented young people in Indiana get into tech

---

MEET PATIENCE KORRIE

"I had always been interested in tech but never had the opportunity to enter into that world until Nextech," Patience said. "How can someone like me, with no one to relate to, figure out if tech is really for us?"

With your help, young people can see their future in tech

"Society sees technology as something that men do, like it's a hard and complicated career path that only rare people go through, and those people are male."

Patience found a path to a computer science career through Nextech's Catapult program. She met female tech CEOs and saw how tech is integrated into so many careers. She graduates from Taylor University in May with a degree in digital media systems ... and no more doubts about where she belongs.

GIVE TODAY to help more students like Patience see their future in tech

nextech 