

Car accidents happen. Every single day, at any given time, there are a variety of causes and circumstances that can lead to a car wreck. Unfortunately, sometimes there is nothing you can do to avoid the situation, and if you do find yourself in the aftermath of an accident, there are a number of things that you should do in order to be prepared for the following repercussions. Whether you are the victim and are injured, or you are at fault and injure someone else, or the car accident results in a fatality of a loved one, you may want to consider contacting an attorney who specializes in personal injury and car accidents. A personal injury lawyer will be able to provide you with the legal services that you will need to most efficiently resolve all issues regarding your car accident. Some of the most common types of automobile accidents in South Carolina include, but are not limited to:

- Drunk driving accidents
- Aggressive driving
- Wrong-way driving
- Speeding, or reckless driving
- Failure to stop or yield
- Tailgating
- Texting or other forms of distracted driving

If you have been involved in an auto accident in South Carolina, it is important to remember that there is a statute of limitations regarding when you can file a lawsuit or insurance claim for your accident. In South Carolina, you have three years from the date of your accident to file such claims or lawsuits. Automobile accidents are very disrupting to an individual's life, so resolving your case quickly is necessary. To ensure that your case is handled in a timely manner, you should immediately consult with an attorney. An attorney who specializes in personal injury and car wrecks will be able to help you understand your legal rights to compensation. An important first step towards guaranteeing that you receive the compensation you deserve is to make sure that the entire process is well documented. An experienced attorney will assist you in collecting proof of all expenses related to your accident, including medical expenses, property damage, wages lost as a direct result of the accident, and your pain and suffering.

You may think that you can handle navigating the legal aspects of a car accident on your own, but oftentimes, these issues are far more complex than they may seem at the surface. Dealing with insurance companies alone is stressful, and it's important to note that only an attorney will truly have your best interest. Only an attorney will advocate for your legal rights, not an insurance adjuster. You do not want to make the mistake of signing documents or giving written or verbal statements that you do not fully understand, that may limit or erase any compensation you are entitled to. Having an attorney present during every conversation with an insurance adjuster will prevent those mistakes from happening, ensuring that victims of personal injury are fully compensated.

Don't allow a car accident to consume your life. Let an experienced personal injury lawyer handle your case so that your life can resume quickly. Take the time to research a firm in your area that will best suit the needs of your case. Get ahead of your case, by consulting with an attorney immediately, and allow them to fight for your legal rights as a victim of a car accident.
