READER w/CUT: The Mystery Hour's Final TV Taping To Incorporate COVID Vaccine Clinic

After ten seasons, The Mystery Hour, hosted by Jeff Houghton, is transitioning from television to focus on live, digital, in-person content. Before the show's final taping at the Gillioz Theatre Friday night, and also during the intermission, COVID-19 vaccines will be administered to those who want one, Houghton said.

“So, we’re going to use the upstairs part of the lobby. They call it the “rotunda area” I think. It’s this big circular opening so there’ll be a couple of nurses up there and that’s where it’s going to be. So, in the same building.”

The event comes as local health officials try to boost slowing vaccination rates and an uptick in COVID-19 hospitalizations in Springfield. Part of that outreach effort has been to collaborate with events and community organizations. Shots will be available for ticketed audience members starting at 6:30 Friday evening, with The Mystery Hour's final taping starting an hour later.
