The Britpop bloc is hot and these blokes only toss more Molotovs into the hedges. After releasing a plethora of singles on their native island, the Mystery Jets compile their early greatest for this stateside EP. The group includes a father and son and it seems the old man's shoved his decreasingly square prog/psych record collection down the collective throat of his twentysomething bandmates. Here the MJs regurgitate the half-digested mess while doing a spastic dance. DAN FRAZIER
