SENTIERI'S FOTOROMANZO

Anyone who has ever taken an Italian language course at Ohio University knows exactly what I am talking about. Each section of our textbook has the typical vocabulary and culture sections, but everyone's favorite part of starting a new unit is the fotoromanzo. The short videos cover college students Emily, Viola, Riccardo, and Lorenzo as they live together in a family's boarding house in Rome, covering their day-to-day interactions and teaching us Italian in a fun and dramatic way. Many Thread meetings this year have involved enthusiastic discussions of the newest episode and I spent this entire academic year eagerly awaiting the next installment. I will never finish it because I am graduating and only in the first level of the language, but I recommend taking Italian as your language, even if only to follow the charming and addicting series.
