

Pay-as-You-Go Flight School: Is it Right for You?

Are you interested in learning to fly, but aren't sure what type of program you'll need? Let's take a dive into the pros and cons of part-time flight training to help you pinpoint what's right for you.

Pros and Cons of Pay-as-You-Go Flight School

Before you decide what type of flight training is suitable for you, it's important to determine your objectives with aviation. If a full-time program isn't doable for you, part-time education is a great option. What are the pros and cons?

Pay-as-You-Go Flight School Pros

Part-time flight training comes with a variety of benefits:

- Holding a job while training

Part-time students have the option to work while they train. This can be an excellent way to help them pay for their education as they move through the program of their choosing. In a full-time program, having a job isn't viable.

- Training on your own time

Part-time training is flexible and can be custom-made for each student. This means students can train on their own timeline, allowing them to meet their goals as they see fit.

- Program variety

Students have a multitude of different training paths to choose from for their own success. This can depend on their aspirations and any previous flight training experience they may have.

Pay-as-You-Go Flight School Cons

While part-time training may work for some, it's not for everyone. There are certain cons associated with it:

- Unavailable financing

Pay-as-you-go flight training means financing is not an option. However, because students train on their own time, a part-time job to help pay for training can be a practical solution.

- Program length

A full-time, accelerated flight program, for those interested in flying for the commercial airlines, can take approximately two years to complete. A part-time, pay-as-you-go program length will be based on an individual's training objectives and schedule and will take longer.

- Loss of knowledge

Loss of knowledge can be another downside to a part-time program. If students aren't fully focused and dedicated to their studies, it can be easy to lose critical flying skills over time.

While pay-as-you-go flight school has its pros and cons, it's ultimately up to the student to dictate the best option for them and their aspirations in the field.

AeroGuard's Pay-as-You-Go Program

AeroGuard offers an exceptional pay-as-you-go flight training program. With top-tier curriculum, a wide fleet of 70+ aircraft and multiple locations to choose from, students can hone their skill and take their dreams skyward!

Connect with an Enrollment Advisor to learn more.