

Jenna's Cry for new roles

VICTORIA star Jenna Coleman is fed up with playing grisly characters and is looking for new, less gruesome roles. Jenna, 37, told The Italian Reve magazine: 'At the moment, there's this common theme of murderers, I don't know where it's coming from.' Jenna, left - who played a child killer in TV series The Cry, and a murderer's accomplice in The Serpent - has been turning down similar work and says she is on the hunt to play a character more open with their emotions.

ROBBIE Williams has won permission to fell a 70ft Robinia tree at his West London home, despite eco-zealot neighbours' protests. Robbie, 49, can now focus on his fight for an indoor pool, gym and underground passage which his neighbour, Led Zeppelin's Jimmy Page, 79, opposes, fearing vibrations would damage valuable artworks.

That's a novel idea! Hugh's wife writes a book... about loving a star

THEY say you should write about something you know well, and Hugh Grant's Swedish wife Anna seems to have taken that advice to heart for her debut novel.

With echoes of Hugh's role in the movie Notting Hill and her life on the arm of one of the world's best known actors, Anna Eberstein has teamed up with her sister Mari to write Plus One, which translates as Plus One.

The novel, which is published under the pseudonym Elsa Vildvin, tells the story of a woman called Nike who falls in love with a world-famous movie star named Jack.

However, Nike soon discovers that dating a star comes with the pitfall of constantly living in the public eye. It was published last week by Swedish publishing house Lind & Co and runs to 300 pages.

The book seems to have many similarities to Anna's own life and it draws comparisons with Notting Hill, the 1999 romcom in which Hugh plays bumbling bookshop owner William Thackeray who is thrust into the spotlight when he begins dating movie star American Hollywood Anna Scott, played by Julia Roberts.

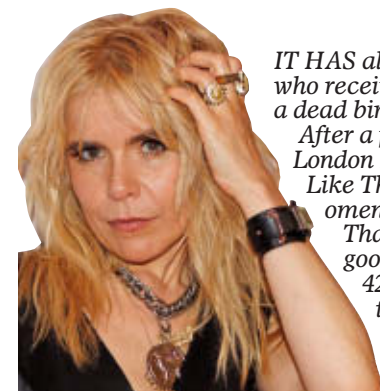

Hugh, 62, who married Anna in 2018, took to social media site X to praise her, saying: 'I am so proud of my wife who has written her first novel.' Hugh has two daughters and a son with Anna and also shares two children with Tinglan Hong.

On becoming a father in his 50s, Hugh has said: 'It was the nicest thing that's ever happened to me. It's just lovely to have all that love around. Suddenly you love someone more than yourself. It's unheard of in my case and it's all enchanting.'

PLUS ONE: Hugh and his wife Anna

If anyone can empathise with Anna's book it is model Liz Hurley who became well known as Hugh's girlfriend when the pair dated after they met on the set of Spanish film Remando Al Viento in 1988. They separated in 2000 but remain close friends and Hugh is godfather to Liz's son Damian.

IT HAS been kicking off for singer Paloma Faith who received a bit of bad news last week courtesy of a dead bird - and was saved by Google. After a pigeon crashed into a window at her East London home and then died, the Only Love Can Hurt Like This star became concerned that it was an omen for darker things. Thankfully, Google was on hand to provide some good old psychoanalysis and informed Paloma, 42, left, that the dead bird was actually a sign that she was struggling to find peace within herself and her close relationships. I doubt clearing up all that mess would have been a very Zen experience though...

THE HOTTEST GOSSIP

Give a dog a Bonas... Cressida's out with her dachshund

WHILE everyone else appears to be sunning themselves abroad, Prince Harry's former girlfriend Cressida Bonas seems more than happy with a trip to the local coffee shop with her toddler and beloved dog.

Cressida, 34, was spotted enjoying a bit of quiet time in Notting Hill alongside her ten-month-old son Wilbur and dachshund Budgie Bear. The actress and model - married to Harry Wentworth-Stanley - paired a £150 floral maxi skirt from sustainable clothing brand Reformation with a plain vest top, set off with electric blue sunglasses from Isabel Marant.

Not to be outdone in the fashion stakes, baby Wilbur was in a £1,000 customised luxury pushchair from posh parenting company Cybex.

Louis' fright at the museum

HIS documentaries see him using his self-effacing charm to gain access to unlikely places. And it seems Louis Theroux is good at immersing himself in unfamiliar surroundings in real life, too.

The 53-year-old must have forgotten to read the small print on his invitation last week, when he attended an after-party at the Museum of Scotland following his Edinburgh Festival keynote speech. Seemingly unaware there was a VIP area, he found himself in a room of adoring fans instead. Turns out poor old Louis, left, had mistakenly wandered into the 'emerging talent' section, and was promptly swarmed on by selfie hunters, before being ushered away by TV director wife Nancy Strang.

My spy tells me: 'He got mobbed and everyone was congregating around him like bees to a honey pot.'

Bet he was glad Nancy came to the rescue!

WHILE one struggles to imagine Charles and Camilla doing anything similar, here's Prince Harry's 'second Dad' Mark Dyer and his Texan wife Amanda channeling their inner Barbie and Ken.

The ex-Royal equerry used to keep Harry's relationships under wraps by staving off paparazzi.

Royal biographer Penny Junor called Mark, 56, 'one of the few people who talks some sense into him'.

But being sensible is the last thing on his mind in his blond wig, feather boa and tutu.

Yet he was a style icon for Harry, who called Mark 'an extreme ginger' who 'owned it' - making Harry feel less self-conscious about his own hair colouring.

Keeley's glad she was bad

NOW a clean-living poster girl for good health, actress Keeley Hawes, left, has no regrets over her smoking, sun-worshipping past - as it's made her who she is today.

Asked if she'd offer advice to her younger self, the 47-year-old mum of three, married to fellow Spooks star Matthew Macfadyen since 2004, says: 'I could say don't smoke and don't go in the sun, but it was so great.'

'Doing those things are part of what makes you who you are later on, and also makes you the person who says to your children, "Don't smoke, don't vape, put sunscreen on".'

She shares son Myles, 23, with her first husband, DJ Spencer McCallum, as well as Ralph, 17, and daughter Maggie, 18, with Matthew.

Spencer's jaw is such a chore...

ALL husbands get on their wives' nerves, but ever tried relaxing on the sofa while your loved one chomps away on a piece of plastic? Model Vogue Williams, 37, has revealed her frustration with her former Made In Chelsea star husband Spencer Matthews, 35, who is now munching on a lump of plastic in the hope of getting a stronger jawline.

On their podcast, Vogue, right with Spencer, says: 'It's very hard when you're in a room and someone's just chewing on plastic.' They say no pain no gain - but I'm not sure who's suffering the most!

BAKE-OFF'S Noel Fielding, who is also on Never Mind The Buzzcocks and found fame in The Mighty Boosh, reveals: 'It's always Bs with me, there's some kind of magic with the letter B. I'm scared to make a show that doesn't include a B.' Would Noel, 50, ever consider breaking his 'B' streak and join the judging panel on The X Factor, would Simon Cowell decide to bring the show back? 'No disrespect to pop but it's not my thing, X Factor and that s***. I feel slightly sorry for the kids,' he says. Guess, that's a No then.
