

Becker's girl builds a career

AS Boris Becker tries to rebuild his life after a stint in jail for bankruptcy fraud, he might want to seek advice from daughter Anna – she's moving into bricks and mortar.

Anna, 23, has set up a real estate company and has named her mother Angela – pictured with her, left – as a co-director.

Anna was famously conceived after Boris and Angela had a one-night stand at the Nobu restaurant in Mayfair.

Bizarrely, the name of the company, Tetragrammatic, refers to the Hebrew name for God.

Kate just can't escape the lure of London as she snaps up a new bolthole

SHE sold her North London home last year and upped sticks to the country as part of her attempt to become a wellness guru – but it seems the lure of the capital is just too strong for supermodel Kate Moss.

I can reveal Kate, 49, has bought a pied-a-terre in swanky Mayfair, where the average property has a £9.2million price tag.

I'm surprised to see Kate back in the city so soon and hope the purchase of a London bolthole has nothing to do with rumours that she has split from long-term boyfriend Count Nikolai von Bismarck, 35.

Nikolai has been seen at multiple events, such as Glastonbury, without Kate and was photographed with American model Camille Rowe a few weeks ago.

Kate and Nikolai have lived at her ten-bedroom Cotswold mansion since 2022, after she sold her home in Highgate, North London.

Her time in the capital was famously raucous. Council officials were called to investigate noise complaints during riotous celeb parties, and locals filed complaints about Kate's 'tacky' renovations.

A local Green Party councillor even got involved at one stage, raising environmental concerns about a proposed steam room in the house, next door to George Michael's old home.

SPLIT RUMOURS: Kate and Count Nikolai

Hopefully Kate will be a little better behaved at her new abode in Mayfair, where her neighbours include members of Qatar's royal family. Indeed, Mayfair is so popular with wealthy Qataris that the area has been christened Little Doha.

In addition to kitting out her new pad, Kate has her hands full at the moment with her wellness brand Cosmoss. Chatting to the Financial Times, she revealed plans to pioneer the 'Cosmoss world'.

Global domination may or may not be on the horizon, but Mayfair isn't a bad place to start. Kate was approached for comment last night.

Wild about Harry

PRINCE Harry is modelling for Hermes! Well OK, not the real Harry but actor Luther Ford, left, who is due to play him in the upcoming series of The Crown.

Luther was snapped wearing a pyjama-style shirt and shorts at Paris Fashion Week, and given that he should become a household name after starring in The Crown on Netflix, it's no wonder he's practising having his photo taken.

Keen to bolster him, co-star Meg Bellamy, who will play Kate Middleton, has been excitedly flattering Luther over Instagram, commenting 'Wowwww!!!' in response to the fashion pictures.

Emma's hat-trick on a cruise with Carlo

THINGS are clearly hotting up for Emma Raducanu and Carlo Agostinelli – as she fans herself with a 'do not disturb' hat after joining him on a Greek break.

The British tennis star, 20, has been cruising the Aegean with no expense spared, as snaps posted on social media prove. Carlo's father is Italian-US billionaire Robert Agostinelli and also in tow is Carlo's sister, ex-Made in Chelsea star Heloise Agostinelli. Though Emma and the ex-Harrow head boy, 23, are yet to acknowledge their relationship, they have already been snapped together in Mexico, right.

A new beau seems just what she needs after missing much of this season due to injuries. Hopefully next year we'll see Emma switching her summer whites for Wimbledon whites!

◆ I NEVER had Bourne star Matt Damon down as the pipe and slippers type. But he loves nothing more than kicking off his shoes and putting on something more comfy, according to his Oppenheimer co-star Emily Blunt, a neighbour of his in a Brooklyn apartment block she calls a 'weird commune'. She tells Bruce Bozzi's Table For Two podcast: 'I don't ever see Matt Damon not in his slippers any more. I haven't seen him in regular shoes in a long time.'

Amanda's Paris plight

I HEAR fashionista Amanda Harlech got more than she bargained for on a trip to Paris – she went there for a beauty treatment and ended up getting mugged. Amanda, left, who has been a right-hand-woman for top designers including Karl Lagerfeld and John Galiano, was feeling woozy after her procedure and was on her way to enjoy some well-deserved bedrest when she was accosted in the street.

Now it's car park karaoke

WE'VE heard of carpool karaoke – now here comes car park karaoke. Posh pop star Dylan, above, made her Glastonbury debut this summer and is about to release a single with Bastille frontman Dan Smith, but she says the highlight of her year so far was stumbling across Ed Sheeran and rapper Lil Nas X singing outside New York's MetLife Stadium. 'It was not on my bingo card for 2023, so naturally it provided a lot of laughs,' Stowe-educated Dylan tells me. Of the day her single, Liar, Liar, is released next month, she says: 'I'll probably stare at streaming statistics in sheer panic for 24 hours, then have a beer!'

◆ WOMAN'S Hour host and debut novelist Anita Rani has bagged the kind of publicity some authors only dream of... courtesy of her BBC colleagues.

When she appeared on the Today programme to discuss what was coming up later in Woman's Hour, presenters Amol Rajan and Justin Webb were happy to tout her book Baby Does A Runner, about a woman investigating her grandfather's affair. Referring to some typically British summer rainfall, one of them said: 'It's a good day weather-wise to stay in and read someone's first novel.' That was quickly followed by: 'Others, of course, are available.' It's a little late for impartiality!

◆ THE house once owned by Winnie-the-Pooh author A.A. Milne and Rolling Stone Brian Jones is up for rent – for £8,500 a week. Cotchford Farm in East Sussex boasts its own pool, tennis court and the chance to stay in Christopher Robin's old bedroom.

Horror-scope alert for Holly

AS IF the last few weeks haven't been difficult enough for This Morning's Holly Willoughby after Phillip Schofield quit, she believes things will get wilder – because of the astrological influence of the planet Venus.

According to Holly's wellness company Wylde Moon, 'Venus is going into retrograde and we're all going to feel it'. Holly, 42, seems to think the stars have a lot in store for us all, especially in romance.

◆ OH, the perks of being famous... presenter Melanie Sykes has revealed her phone company waived her bill running into thousands of pounds when she tweeted about forgetting to turn off data roaming during a trip to the Seychelles. I wonder if I should take to Twitter to complain about my gas bill?
