

Toff makes a dog's dinner

SHE may be out of I'm A Celebrity, but Georgia Toffolo is back in business. The former Made In Chelsea star, 28, is bringing out her own brand of dog food, named Montdog after her beloved pet, Monty.

The pair, left, are inseparable and just celebrated the Coronation by walking down the King's Road in Chelsea with 200 other King Charles spaniels. 'The best day of both mine and Montdog's life,' she said as she posted a video online. The flavours of her dog food have not yet been announced but they surely have to be better than the fish eyes and cockroaches Toff had to eat in the jungle.

ROYAL author Lady Colin Campbell's plans to host pop concerts by the likes of Craig David at her Sussex pad, Castle Goring, have fallen at the first hurdle. It turns out that Lady C, 73, who went on I'm A Celebrity in 2015, didn't have council permission for the events. David's gig in September will now be at nearby Wiston Estate.

THE HOTTEST GOSSIP

Is SamCam stylist now helping Rishi's wife create a new look?

AS A former fashion designer, Rishi Sunak's wife Akshata Murty knows a thing or two about what makes a good look. And flaunting your wealth with high-end clothes when your husband is trying to lead the country out of a biting cost-of-living crisis is definitely not a good look.

That's why the 43-year-old is increasingly earning the praise of fashionistas – including The Mail on Sunday's Alexandra Shulman on Page 24 – for choosing affordable, middle-of-the-range British brands over luxury labels. And one recent visitor to No10 could be behind those winning choices.

It seems that Ms Murty may be seeking style advice from Isabel Spearman, the PR guru who previously worked as an unofficial dresser to Samantha Cameron during her husband's tenure in Downing Street. The brand consultant was spotted heading into No10 just days before last weekend's Coronation, for which the Prime Minister's wife wore a £495 baby blue dress from Claire Mishevani that one commentator praised as 'incredible'.

At the Buckingham Palace reception afterwards she wore an eye-catching royal blue lace dress, costing £400 from Self-Portrait.

And for the Coronation Big Lunch outside Downing Street the following day, Ms Murty wore an £85 blouse from Boden, a high street brand loved by the Princess of Wales. Her choices – described by one observer as 'a masterclass in modern soft-power style' – are a far cry from the £570 pair of sliders she was pictured wearing for the school run in October. A snip for someone said to be worth £700million and heiress to billions more, but beyond the pockets of the vast majority of voters.

Celebrity stylist Miranda Holder said: 'Head-to-toe designer is passé. Dressing more mid-range and mixing things up is an effective, stylish way to support smaller British labels. And Ms Murty's affordable wardrobe messages are being transmitted in a positive and welcome way.'

Ms Murty, who gave up a high-flying finance career to launch her own designer clothing label in 2011, is the daughter of Narayana Murthy, who is reportedly worth £50billion as a founder of Indian IT giant Infosys.

Ms Spearman – the former PR director of accessories brand Anya Hindmarch – was special adviser to Samantha Cameron from 2010 to 2015, on a taxpayer-funded salary of about £60,000 a year. She controversially received an OBE in David Cameron's 2016 resignation honours and her website boasts of how she played 'a formative role in building the international public persona of [Samantha] Cameron'.

Both she and Downing Street declined to comment last night.

Weisz-washed!

HER new TV role is as a pair of unhealed, sexed-up, gynaecologist twins who binge on cocaine. But what caused Rachel Weisz, right, problems in a magazine interview to promote Dead Ringers was a little more prosaic: a cigarette. The actress appears in a drawing on the cover of The Idler with a lit fag in her hand – too much for supermarket chiefs who insisted it be Photoshopped out for copies on their shelves. Subscribers still get the offending version.

Bea is for books

COULD Princess Beatrice and Queen Camilla be collaborating on a children's literacy project? Beatrice certainly seemed to drop some hints when she presented the Oscar's Book Prize for best picture book last week. Having praised the new Queen on her commitment to literacy, the 34-year-old Princess, who is patron of the award, teased: 'I'm hoping we can work out some more fantastic ways to collaborate more with the prize.' Nothing is confirmed yet, but you heard it here first!

Lily-Rose's Weeknd of stardom

THE rapturous adulation of an adoring crowd can be addictive for a pop star – as Johnny Depp's actor daughter Lily-Rose Depp has discovered.

Lily-Rose, left, plays a successful singer alongside real-life hip rapper The Weeknd in upcoming HBO series The Idol. The producers came up with the bright idea of filming a real The Weeknd concert to capture shots of a delirious crowd for a scene in the show, and sent Lily-Rose, 23, up on stage to join her co-star.

'I didn't want to leave,' confesses the daughter of Pirates Of The Caribbean star Johnny and French model Vanessa Paradis.

Kylie's having a field day

THEY'RE normally the epitome of glamour. But Dannii Minogue has revealed that she and sister Kylie aren't afraid to get their hands dirty. Dannii, 51, says they are both 'part-time farmers' on their family cattle ranch in Australia, telling the Table Manners podcast: 'The minute we step on the farm, Kylie and I have clothes that are old that have holes in them... we look homeless.'

Twiggy branches out into music

TWIGGY'S singing career may never have hit the heights of her modelling days – but that isn't deterring her from launching another assault on the charts, aged 73. The star's recording career peaked with a self-titled album that reached No33 in 1976. Other releases over the decades, including one produced by disco queen Donna Summer, sank without trace. But Twiggy, left, is trying again with a new album and has been busy preparing her vocal cords by drinking an infusion of sage leaves.

Chatting on her podcast, Tea With Twiggy, she says: 'It's really good for your throat,' but admits she draws the line at drinking the leftover sludge at the bottom of the cup. Now that's sage advice.
