WEATHER: Long overdue

STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT CANDIDATES TO BRAWL ON THE SEAL

On March 10, the Associated Student Government (ASG) partnered with The Miami Student (TMS) to host the Student Body President and Vice President Candidate Debate (SBPVPCD).

Because that's boring, our staff will host a brawl with flintlocks and flails on the seal, a point of (love and) honor on our campus, to determine the student body's next human sacrifice chosen one.

Here's what dubious voters need to know:

Kaur-Grubb hopes "to disserve Miami with Hate" and dismantle student government; our staff was preemptively bribed with one of the university's nuclear submarines.*

Tyree-Pollock runs on a platform of randomized tuitions, longer recess, and post-pandemic survivalism.

Stein-Weiss is not an imported beer.

All uncandid candidates support being photographed, want to challenge students' mental health, and promise to keep making promises if elected.

Plebs can cast lots to wager on the next intrepid inheritors-to-be of our idiocracy March 15 at 7 a.m. to March 16 at 7 p.m.

*Hate & Dishonor, as college jester, endorses no candidates, espouses chaos, and encourages smear campaigns.

(And we have a nuclear submarine now.)

VENDING MACHINES TO FEATURE UNSKIPPABLE ADS, EXIT SURVEYS

Vending machines now require customers to watch commercials before obtaining any grab-and-go snacks and beverages.*

Customers can expect to be targeted by inconveniently placed advertisements and profiling sentry guns.

Wannabe hackers who opt to block cookies will have their purchased cookies — or other goodies — blocked without a refund.

After each purchase, exit surveys will continuously charge customers until they are satisfied with their experience.

Payment methods only include credit, debit, or pounds of flesh at this time to help usher in a cashless, classless, stateless state university.

*Pepsi-Cola has exclusive rights to sell its products across the university despite students' ~~pre~~ penchant preference for coke.

MUBUCKS CRYPTO CURRENCY SKYROCKETS

MUBucks, a volatile crypto currency that had lost all its value years ago, has recently soared, exciting long-term investors.

MUBucks is now valued at $0.00002.

The crypto currency will continue to climb to the right on the stock charts, but market analysts are struggling to speculate whether the stock will go up or down.

The paper-view humor everyone's crumpling up.

ROOMMATE LOOKS HOT IN BORROWED CLOTHES, LAWSUIT PENDING

A young woman is recovering from serious injuries to her ego after she claims her roommate robbed her of her unique style.

Emily, who has requested to remain anonymous, told us her side of the story on her private story.

“I never thought this would happen,” Emily messaged her group chat, according to screenshots she uploaded for us to view. “I’m literally shaking.”

The clothes in question, a pair of black leggings and a really cute top, were later reported stolen and stretched out.

Emily’s roommate, Emily, who has requested to remain anonymous, denies these allegations.

“It’s the lack of evidence for me,” Emily’s roommate’s attorney, Emily, who has requested to remain anonymous, stated to gossipers and journalists alike. “Justice, like my client’s looks, will be served.”

RED-SKINNED POTATO CONTROVERSY ENDS IN DISPLAY OF SOLIDARITY

New students and their families members have been transitively offended during recent orientation tours because dining halls were serving red-skinned potatoes.

In response to the backlash, President Crawford and Provost Osborne sat to eat 100 potatoes each, live in front of a studio audience, as recompense.

“Have mercy,” the men sobbed between bites. “At least cook them first.”

Student Orientation Undergraduate Leaders are now required to tell tours that Miami University is figuratively built on a Native American burial ground.

THE WEATHER

Global warming is a good thing after all. Warm weather means no masks or pants; partly clouded judgment should blow over. Advisory: just because the weather is nice doesn’t mean that it’s flirting with you.

EMPORIUM CLOSED, “DOWN BAD” STUDENTS FILL MACCRACKEN

Emporium, a campus market, is closed indefinitely due to supply chain issues, labor shortages, and radon.

Market Street at MacCracken, meanwhile, has had to bend over backwards this whole week to satisfy students’ cravings.

Long lines pack the market wall to wall, which means employees often have to use the back door to get down to business.

“We don’t really like doing it this way,” staff openly communicated. “What if we get [COVID-19]?”

FACT CHECK COVID-19 is endemic, which means it has ended.

Exploring new places has put customers in uncomfortable positions, too.

“It’s a tight squeeze,” came a first-timer. “To be honest, I would rather eat out.”

The Black Market at MacMillan, another supplier of meh-nourishment on the block, costs an arm and a leg, but has short lines.

“BUT, LIKE, WHAT IS IT?”

Hate & Dishonor is an asocial experiment gone wrong, but it feels oh so right. Face the factoids: we’re totally your type of type.
