How Does a Collaborative Divorce Work?

Divorce can be a challenging and bewildering process, with many emotions involved. It often entails acquiring legal representation, court appearances, and a substantial investment of time and money. Nonetheless, couples who are in mutual agreement can pursue a negotiation settlement, or collaborative divorce, that can streamline the process. How does a collaborative divorce work? Learn more about the collaborative divorce process below and turn to the team at %%di_name%% if you need a collaborative divorce attorney in the %%target_city_1%%-area.

What is a Collaborative Divorce?

The collaborative divorce process starts with the ideas of mediation and negotiation. Both parties enter the process to complete the divorce process efficiently, cost-effectively, and harmoniously. With the help of a collaborative divorce attorney, both parties agree to keep the negotiation out of court and work to identify goals and terms that work for both parties. By reducing the number of court appearances and filings, collaborative divorces are often far less costly than traditional, litigated divorces near %%target_city_2%%.

A collaborative divorce attorney is beneficial as they can clarify the process and help point you in the right direction. They also utilize a team of specialists who can guide you through financial matters and agreements with children.

What is the Collaborative Divorce Process?

Understanding how a collaborative divorce works can help take the worry out of the process. Here are the typical steps in the negotiated divorce process:

- Each spouse hires a lawyer trained in collaborative law. They will guide you through the process and help prepare you for meetings in the future.
- Both parties will sign a participation agreement that sets the tone for the collaboration process. In the agreement, each spouse agrees to keep the negotiations out of court and on respectful terms and agrees to provide the necessary financial documents to move forward. It also includes a direction that both attorneys must withdraw from the case if it does go to court.
- When you meet with your attorney privately, be sure to outline exactly what you want out of the process, whether it's financial terms or child care determinations. Keep in mind that this is a negotiation process and may require compromise.
- Through a series of meetings, both parties' negotiation settlement teams will work to come to an agreement. These meetings may include neutral experts including mental health professionals, child custody specialists, and financial professionals.
- Once co-parenting, child support, division of assets, and spousal support are agreed upon, both teams will draw up legally binding documents and file them with the court to finalize the divorce agreement.
