

Jessica Wong

“The Worst Date Ever”

It was the time when Erica Hernandez first graduated out of college.

Just moved out of the socially active lifestyle, she began thinking about planning her future career and love life. She had a few friends that actually met their husbands on Tinder. She decided to give it a try.

Filled with hope, Hernandez took a few pictures at places she enjoyed to visit. She posted them along with her favorite hobbies and swiped away.

But just like any other date, a Tinder date might not always be the best date that lead to happily ever after. On her third Tinder date, Hernandez came across what she considered the worst date of her life.

“Well, I currently am with Nick, the man I believe I will marry someday.” said Erica Hernandez. “I had met multiple wrong men before I met Nick. But this one guy, David, was legit the worst date ever.”

The date happened 7 years ago when Hernandez decided to uber to David’s house. Hernandez arrived his house for movies night. David’s house had no lights on when he invited Hernandez in. As Hernandez realized that fact, she suggested they go do something else.

“I just told him that we should go out and see a movie instead.” said Hernandez. “But then he decided to go to the liquor store for alcohol.”

When they bought the alcohol, he did not have an ID. Hernandez felt something was not right.

Especially, she later realized he was a terrible kisser and immediately wanted sexual favors.

“That was it. That was the worst date anyone can ever have.” said Hernandez.