Gemini founders Cameron and Tyler Winklevoss are probably the most well-known cryptocurrency investors in the world and for good reason: according to the New York Times (<https://dealbook.nytimes.com/2013/04/11/as-big-investors-emerge-bitcoin-gets-ready-for-its-close-up/>), the two were early acolytes of blockchain-powered currency, having held positions in Bitcoin since 2012 before expanding to other coins and eventually launching the Gemini trading platform in 2015 (<https://www.bloomberg.com/news/articles/2015-10-05/bitcoin-exchange-founded-by-winklevoss-twins-debuts-as-gemini>).

As serious long-term investors in this still-nascent technology, they've weathered flash crashes and dips while others folded, demonstrating an unwavering confidence in their conviction that decentralized currency has the power to change the world. "We've put our money where our mouth is," Cameron Winklevoss told an audience at Techcrunch's 2015 Disrupt NY conference (<https://techcrunch.com/2015/05/06/winklevoss-twins-eat-sleep-breathe-bitcoin/>). "We don't just have our skin in the game, we have our whole body in the game... I don't know if we're experts, but the goal is not to be an expert but to change the world." Since then, the two have reaped the rewards of holding as Bitcoin and other cryptos have proven to have real staying power and applications that exceed conventional ideas of currency as a medium of exchange.

SumZero CEO – and Gemini board member – Divya Narendra sat down for an in-depth conversation with Cameron and Tyler Winklevoss to discuss their thesis on Bitcoin reaching $500,000 (<https://sumzero.com/pro/research/ideas/18971>) – a roughly 10x jump from its recent $50,000 high – along with understanding the value of cryptocurrencies as networks, the strengths and potential of Ethereum ("If Bitcoin is Central Park, Ethereum is the entire island of Manhattan"), the burgeoning NFT market, DeFi, the future of social media, and more.
