There's a kind of writing that's not flashy, but it just knows. That's what this book is. The voice is unpretentious, even funny at times, but underneath is a quiet mastery. Every sentence feels true. From Ben's philosophical rants, to Jay's loss of childhood, to the ordinary grief of Daani watching people she loves fall apart—none of it felt forced. Just raw and earned. I'll be buying copies to gift.
