Soon after, he regrets his role in the coverup but is caught between a rock and a hard place. The life of everyone involved has been forever changed, especially that of the teenager's parents, played by King and Hornsby.

Castillo was overjoyed to be a part of a project that will force people to have uncomfortable conversation.

"I think when storytelling is at its best can be cathartic and healing," Castillo told Latina.com. "I think we have real potential with the show to provide an experience for an audience that needs to heal and needs to unpack a lot of what's been going on for generations.

“And I think Veena has created a really great mix of characters and we’re able to examine different parts of the criminal justice system in pockets of the United States that don’t often get representation on television.”

He continued, “As the only man of color in this unit of detectives, Osorio becomes this litmus test for this other voice and this other perspective. It’s so easy for them to dehumanize Butler. I think his sense of guilt and his own grappling with what they’ve done sort of starts to chip away at him.”

Up next for the 40-year-old star is a role in the Sundance darling “We Are Animals” based on the Justin Torres novel of the same name.

“I’m so excited about projects that I have coming up this year, especially this film that just debuted at Sundance, ‘We The Animals.’ We had a really warm reception from the audience and we got picked-up for distribution from The Orchard. We’ll be in one hundred theaters this August.

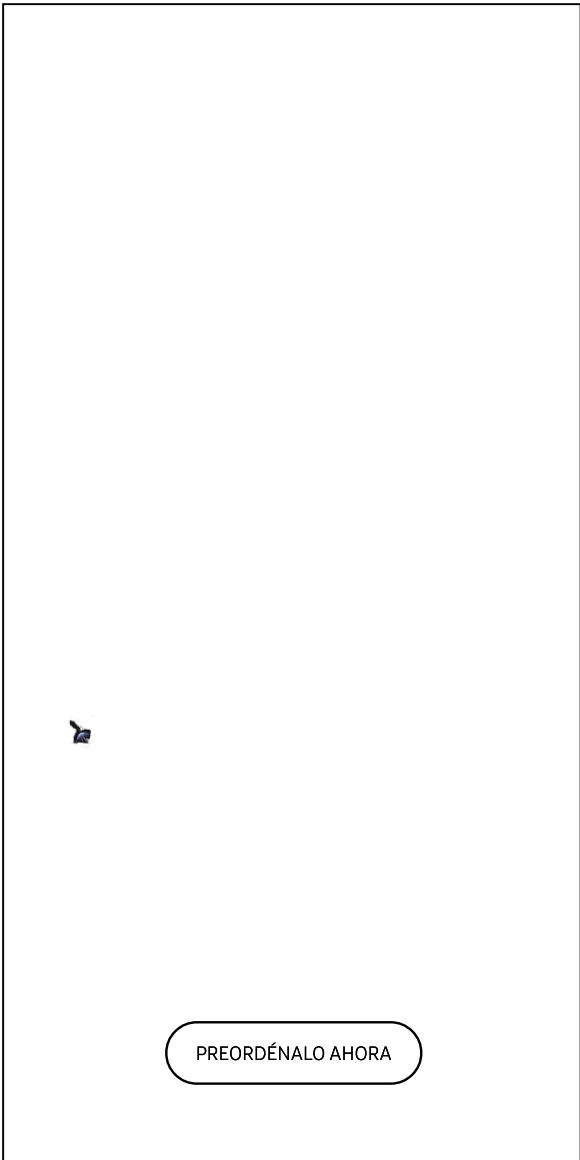

“I’m so proud to have brought this to the screen. It’s a real examination of masculinity. Jeremiah Zagar, our director who told.”
