You are nearly learning a new language full of terminology you've maybe heard before, but never had to put to use. Your body is changing, your hormones are raging, and, though you may have never given an item such as a nasal aspirator another thought in your life so far, now it's time to decide which nasal aspirator is right for your baby! In Clearwater, Florida, specifically, finding young families and stores to support your newborn-raising life is a little challenging, so follow some of these tips to help your transition run a little bit more smoothly.

Whether you're preparing to meet your first or your fifth, it's important to be as ready as time will allow for the arrival of your new baby. Unless your home is already overflowing with diapers, wipes, onesies, baby toys, bibs, and all other items that encompass the life of a newborn, it's time to go shopping for your little one. If your home is overflowing with any other hoarded items, consider a garage sale or low-priced self-storage for the time being. You'll need the room!

In the Clearwater, Florida area, it's a little more challenging to encounter baby stores due to the demographic and the tendency for the vicinity to be more of a vacation destination than a residential area. Fortunately, Babies "R" Us has a location both in Clearwater and in nearby Brandon. Travel outside of the Clearwater region, however, and you're looking at a 35+ minute drive to the closest baby store! Luckily, individual baby shops such as Pregnancy Treasures & Boutique have begun to sprout up as the area's weather appeals to more young families and baby items are increasingly in demand.

Since your life will undoubtedly become more complex with the arrival of a new baby, be best prepared by making even the most routine tasks easier on yourself. It's safe to say that your hands will nearly always be full and you'll find typical maneuvers such as bending over to pick something up physically impossible. Ensure that your changing area station is always fully stocked, even if this requires a daily inventory review. Keep diapers and wipes handy, even atop your changing table or hutch, as even reaching into a drawer while trying to balance your newborn on his/her changing pad is a challenge.

Since babies grow quickly, save yourself a couple of trips to the store early on by stocking up on outfits up through 6 months of age. Consider creating an extensive baby registry so that family and friends have the ability to help you out with purchases without having to ask any questions. As a bonus, you can keep your registry as an ongoing checklist of items that you wish to acquire throughout your baby's first year.

Safety, health, and well-being should always come first, so it's best to be fully stocked with items such as nasal aspirators, thermometers, brushes, nail clippers, unscented soap, and shampoo. No matter how many children you have, and particularly if this is your first, there is no guarantee that breast-feeding will be successful if attempted. Therefore, mentally prepare yourself for the concept of formula-feeding and review the directions for mixing formula bottles so that you are not reading the box while your baby cries for food. Trust me on this one.

Most importantly, prepare to have the time of your life. It will be exhausting and at times completely overwhelming, but you will still close your eyes at night-- if given the opportunity to sleep-- with a knot in your stomach that whispers a subtle reminder that your baby is as big as he/she has ever been and as small as he/she will ever be again. Time will not stop to remind you to take it all in, so remember, above all things, to do this.
