

Get to know Isys and Ise'a McGhee, the McGhee twins. These beautiful models are making a name for themselves with their versatile style. The pair started modeling in 2016, collaborating with upcoming photographers, stylists, makeup artists and business owners to build each other's portfolio. Their inspiration came from seeing their friend's creative projects and noticing there weren't a lot of professional models that looked like them. McGhee twins describe their modeling style as editorial, with the ability to create different looks and letting their individual style shine through as well.

This project with In The City Magazine is the one they are most proud of so far in their career. The ladies thrive on working as a team with other creatives, getting out of their comfort zone and making something unique and dope. Their goals for the future are to be signed international models, be an inspiration to other women who want to pursue their dreams in modeling and create a new style of modeling, print, commercial or runway.

Their advice for other models trying to get discovered:

"Create your own lane and put your modeling career in your own hands. Always work hard, never give up, and no matter what anyone says, there will be someone out there that loves your style for what you created it to be. You don't have to change your vision for anyone, and always keep going! Your dreams are just as important as your everyday job/life. Invest in yourself and believe that you can do it. Never forget there's always something to learn, so apply it and progress. You'll see yourself getting better and better. You've got this!"

Amber Jade