Charlottesville Housing Inequality Pt. 1

In this episode, I drew from Paige Glotzer's How the Suburbs Were Segregated as well as Richard Rothstein's The Color of Law to discuss the historical origins of housing segregation in the United States. I discussed the role of urban renewal projects and restrictive covenants in segregating Charlottesville neighborhoods, and I interviewed Blake Rumuly, a demographer at the Weldon Cooper Center. I researched, designed, recorded, and edited this episode.

Returning Citizens Pt 1

This episode is hosted by my colleague Cassie Deering. I conducted research and wrote the script for this episode, which discusses the historical origins of felon disenfranchisement laws in Virginia. We interviewed Richard Miles, founder of Miles of Freedom, a Dallas-based nonprofit organization that assists incarcerated people with re-entry to society. Miles was wrongfully convicted of murder and aggravated assault at the age of 19 and spent fifteen years in prison. I researched and designed this episode. ## Returning Citizens Pt 3

In this episode, I interviewed Sandra Carter who works at the Piedmont House, a transition house for formerly incarcerated men in the Charlottesville area. I also discuss the importance of transitional housing in reducing recidivism and shared statistic regarding the various challenges returning citizens face related to poverty and housing. I researched, designed, recorded, and edited this episode.
