

Rea Vianica C. Sampaga

Grade 12A-St. John the Evangelist

Article: Students' Educational Use of Facebook Groups

Modern technologies impact people's work and lifestyle, which gives lesser tasks, better communication, and more efficient transportation. One of the factors of a person's entertainment is Facebook, a social media app where you can share your thoughts, messages, videos, and many more. Facebook helps to grow a person's social interactions and language development.

Many individuals are using Facebook groups to share ideas with their friends. Many students prefer peer-to-peer learning because they encourage each other to learn more. Sending concepts of projects can keep as being relevant and accurate in our activities. Even myself, I also like to share my understanding regarding different subjects with my classmates and friends. I was filled with energy and courage to do my school works when I am with them. To further things, I am not the only one who benefit from this kind of educational use, but also them. For instance, I can send my notes after class in case my classmates or friends are absent. Learning from one another became my stepping stone to change my uncertainties. Using a Facebook group makes me more knowledgeable and unworried because someone helps me recover from my mistakes. Occasionally, my Facebook friends share their overview in subjects/ topics; so that I am not surprised or afraid of taking loads of works. In addition, shy students may not want to approach their teachers before or during class, but they can chat or communicate on Facebook. In my opinion, Facebook is significant to connect our relationships to others, so as to share educational or entertainment purposes.

Generally, Facebook advocates a genuine dialogue or conversation between a person's real-life situations and experiences. The developing and the developed countries are sharing knowledge and international coordination.