In 1887, Adolphus Busch founded the Manufacturers Railway Company. This short-line track contained 13.5 miles of track, connecting the Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis to the Alton and Southern Railway in Illinois. A favorite of many railroad enthusiasts because of its long history, this line not only streamlined their beer delivery system, but it was also used to ship everything from bags to boilers and bathtubs along the St. Louis riverfront. In the 1940s, "the beer railroad" maintained 42 miles of track, shipping until its closure on March 13, 2011.

This 11-1/2" Manufacturers Railway Flatcar not only features a beautifully painted woodgrain deck, but it's also equipped with premium metal trucks and operating couplers. But this impressive piece doesn't stop there! Sitting atop the flatcar is an O scale die-cast beverage truck. From its bold red paint and chrome accents to its Budweiser® branded decorations, this lifelike truck has it all. It even includes side doors that actually open!

Let's be honest, this tank isn't "O scale," but it sure looks cool and it makes for a great load on a traditional-sized "O27" flatcar. Check out this tank's impressive northern European camouflage and military markings. This tank even has pullback action and a rotating turret! And the price is so great that we just had to share this with you!
