

Describe how the following institutions influence your development as a person (school, government, religion and family)

Firstly, in school, my teachers, together with school administrators, influence students. They serve as our second parents; in accordance, they observe and guide us in our daily knowledge, also good morals. As my educators and coaches assisted and molded my capabilities and goals, time passed by, I learned to be more productive and creative in my school works and improve my abilities in particular sport or hobbies. Not only my mentors; but also my classmates and schoolmates that support me throughout my sports career and academic performance. My friends always gave their hands to uplift my self-confidence and self-competence whenever I joined competitions or had a terrible day. They influenced me by showing their sincerity of love and care for me; as an attribute, I obtained belongingness, positivity, and happiness and developed my behavior and identity.

Secondly, a country started to attain a healthy and systematic environment when the laws, restrictions, and guidelines were present. Our government handles every institution to maintain a well-established economy and sustain people's desires in society. As a result, I learned to be a socially and politically aware citizen, in consideration, of the country's daily occurrences. I always keep myself being obedient to my community and other places since I need to follow policies. It helps everyone to commit and do satisfactorily action that will sustain economic growth.

Thirdly, religion gives religious people a fascinating attitude, pure mentality, and harmonious faith. Having a belief makes me grow as a dignified example for many individuals in my community because I set myself not to harm others or stab their backs. Also, the help of vast influence of religion makes my vision clearer. I always write a reminder and task-to-do in my journal or diary; I set a meaningful vision for myself. With these objectives, it motivates me to pursue my loads of works. By the means of religion, I lived with a perception that directed me to straight roads and sturdy stairs.

Lastly, my family inspires me to connect these three institutions, such as school, government, and religion/ church, towards myself. My beloved parents embraced my flaws and showcased their love, easefulness, and understanding of both formidable and feeble points in my life. As I go through my difficulties, worries, and messes, they guide my stand of the factual position and give me parental advice. Forever grateful to my parents for every step of achievement I made. My parent said, "Triumph is not a wheel of luck, but a choice to will." As I discover and encounter a lot of surprising events, it is inevitable to feel pain both in the past and present. I learned that it still hurt or affect our lives amidst hardships, but I was enlightened to adopt life experiences, in reality, to fully aim for my triumph.

In general, I am humbled and grateful to my family, relatives, friends, neighbors, teachers, coaches that assist and develop me as the best version of myself. They believe in my persevered work and escort me to get closer to my dreams. Since people support and comfort me, as a return, I give or share experiences and life lessons to my little sister, friends, and colleagues.
