

Christopher Robin
by Alex Bengzon

You must understand the consequences
Of being aware, of being unique
Under the supervision of the ignorant
Remember that you are still a child

Imagination is fickle, it is different and kind
Let it run through your mind, for it
Lessens the probability of becoming Negligent

Everyone ridicules you for creating friendships between a bear and a pig, who Sometimes call themselves Pooh and Piglet
Speaking of such provokes others to think that you really have gone mad

Do not be frightened
Of humans who have grown tired of fabrication
Expect their prudence to overpower your capability to Surmise what is real or false

Never forget them
Or what they have done for you
The numerous animals who long for your presence

Defend their existence
Explain to the unaware minds
Free the ignorance from the despondent mindset that Imagination is poisonous

Nestle in the idea that you are right
Even when you are not

You must understand that they are real
Only in the caverns of your head
Understand that they are real, but only for you
