

Weedmaps • News • Culture & industry

We tried it: Farmer and the Felon's UNLOCKED sungrown flower

Andy Andersen • February 16, 2022 3:01 pm PST | Updated 2 months ago

It shouldn't need to be said, and yet it does: there's more to weed than THC. Much more, though you wouldn't know it on account of how tricky it can be to get a good eighth, half-ounce, or full ounce of bud clockin' in below 25% THC.

As both a smokable-flower enthusiast and frequent visitor to dispensaries across Orange and LA County, I can't tell you how many times I've gone into a shop and received a backward glance at the counter because I asked for bud in the 14 - 17% range.

Like so many other good things in life, cannabis just feels better when it's analog. When cannabis is grown under the sun, you often get a more complex and diverse expression of cannabinoids. That's why, on a day-to-day basis, I gravitate toward sungrown flower that tests around 15 - 17%. THC is still the lead player, but its solo register is both tempered and amped up by a kick-ass backing band — you feel me?

I wasn't always an evangelist for sungrown mids. It all came into focus for me when my local dispensary started selling Farmer and the Felon's UNLOCKED flower — “sungrown weed that does the trick for a great price” — available in eighths, quarters, and ounces.

Find Farmer and the Felon