Attention Cyclops Army. Subtronics has released the fifth and last volume of his series "Now That's What I Call Riddim: Volume 5".

Jesse Kardon, better known as his alias Subtronics is a producer of many talents. His music is intense, high energy, and extremely unique. Subtronics is now known to be one of the most well-known dubstep producers today.

About the series

The series of "Now That's What I Call Riddim" was born just two years ago in 2018. If you have been anywhere on Twitter recently, it's likely you have seen all the rage about his final release.

He is one of the most dedicated producers out there. He was working on volume 5 while simultaneously working on his Hijinx and Lights All Night Festival sets and still managed to release it just 5 days past the new year.

End of the series

Many of you may be wondering why this series has to come to a finale. I was too because they have all just topped off one another. So why stop? Check out his twitter posts here and here where Jesse gives us a short explanation as to why it has to come to an end.

The breakdown

Anyways Volume 5 is more than enough that we could ask for, filled with doubles, insane transitions, and it's also just hilarious. The fitness gram Pacer Test really got me, haven't thought about that in years.

Click here to secure tickets for the Cyclone Invasion 2020 Tour. Secure them fast because with a stacked lineup featuring Chee, He$h, Bommer and Level Up- tickets will be going quick.
