Ghastly just earned the title of uncle of the year. The DJ/producer (real name David Lee Crow) gifted his nephew a brand new MacBook, and better yet – it has the music production software Ableton already installed.

Ghastly shared a video on his Twitter account of his nephew unwrapping the gift. His reaction could actually make you shed a tear. He was instantly filled with joy, and the smile on his face was contagious. It was nothing less than wholesome. This little guy is ready to start making beats!

The reaction:

We can only imagine the laughs that fill that house during the holidays. Along with the nephew's reaction, popular producers such as Sullivan King, Svdden Death, Blunts and Blondes, Whipped Cream and many more were hit right in their feels responding to the tweet. "This is the content I love to see," "This is so sick dude," and "This is so precious."

According to Ghastly, this was something his nephew (whose name is Cruz) has been aspiring to do. Young Cruz has looked up to Ghastly for years now. In 2015, he dressed up as his uncle for Halloween and absolutely nailed it! Also in 2016, Ghastly showed the crowd how important his nephew is to him by bringing him on stage at Phoenix Lights – creating a moment he would never forget.

Ghastly himself is entirely self-taught, first starting to mess around with sounds at the age of 12. At age 16, he started to record beats on computers, and then eventually came across Ableton. His musical style spans a variety of EDM genres, mostly focusing on dubstep and more recently house. Ghastly also announced a forthcoming album, titled Haunted House. We'll be looking forward to hearing it in the near future.
