Authors Statement

Writing all of the pieces was difficult; traveling a lot and missing class made it difficult to keep up with the pieces. But having outlines and brainstorming a long list of ideas helped a lot. I believe one of the most complex struggles I had was figuring out how to start each piece. I kept writing and then deleting it, thinking it was not good enough, but I just had to put words down to start, and if I didn't like it once I finished, I could go back and fix it later on. One-piece I had fun writing but also was complicated was the process analysis essay. It was fun to write initially, but trying to make it 1000 words was tough because I was at about 600 words and couldn't figure out how to make it longer, but adding more detail and expanding on my greater meaning helped make it longer. I had a lot of fun writing the poem. Writing poetry relating to a cold winter day was fun. As I look back on all the pieces I did, I believe they made me a better writer and taught me to write in different types of ways.
