Motivation Letter

This letter acts as a request for the newcomers' scholarship. With this document, I submit the rest of my application. I am currently undergoing the admission process at the cultural sociology department for the 2022 fall intake.

I am applying for the MU freshmen scholarship due to financial difficulties. I am an orphan. My three older siblings have gotten me through school, from the start of my first senior term in secondary school till the end of my BSc. Yet again are willing to cover only the first year of my master's study to get me started on a new path in my career. I am grateful for their effort.

I am currently working on a low pay income which has been sustainable in providing application fees and will cover future expenses on documentation and travel.

The scholarship allows me on arrival to properly balance my school, work, and social life without giving too much attention to work in a bid to meet ends meet.

It serves as a safety net for upcoming session tuition fees and I will work smart to maintain the credits that would help me sustain this scholarship.

I want to have a decent student experience where I relate with my peers on a day-to-day challenge. I aspire the luxury of not studying exhaustively or living with anxiety about where the next payment would come to settle an incurred debt or future expenses.

My reason for choosing the cultural sociology program is to have an understanding of qualitative research and thesis writing. I want to refine my interpretative skills and also have a deeper understanding of contemporary pedagogical theories and practices.

I want to be a scholar and this study prepares me for expert publication on various topics. It exposes me to culture, social identity, globalization, and migration. It would give me the necessary steps to apply my knowledge in diverse research subjects.

I expect the program to sharpen my analytical mind and prepare me for scholarly debates and presentations. I also want the opportunity to relate to different cultures and open my mind to different lenses people view the world. I have a remote job as a research writer. I intend to improve my work standard, become an asset to the company and help build the brand to its full potential.

Bob Proctor once said, "How big would you dream? If you knew, you wouldn't fail." The first thing that comes to mind is to be a professor. My father was the first professor in our clan. He brewed my love for learning new things and never pressured me to be the best at anything. His only wish was for my imagination to always stay active, and through my experience with life and mastering my fear, I have decided to take guided steps to be a scholar and the second professor in my clan.

This study will help me achieve my goal and propel me toward my ambition. I will be able to travel and understand different cultures to aid my research and cultural debates. In Nigeria, There are over five hundred and twenty-five native languages spoken by major and minor ethnic groups. It has caused several political rebellions, civil wars, and ethnocentrism. I will be able to prepare research that uncovers the social underbelly of reasoning and a solution-oriented process to rediscover unity regardless of culture and language using other societies as a reference guide in my journey.

I want to share the possibilities surrounding the world with other people. I want to teach students how to engage their imagination and use communication as a tool for people to engage with the vision. To write publications that open individual minds to search for themselves a deeper understanding of challenges they may come across and the value of sticking their noses in it for the development of society and the future generation.

I desire to experience the best parts of this study without feeling the burden of my financial capacity. I am excited about the unknown possibilities this course offers me that I have not yet recognized. I want to achieve the best things life can offer with this new knowledge.

I hope to be qualified for this scholarship. I fear words may fail to express the hope it gives my future. I am honored to have this opportunity and appeal to be considered a worthy student for this scholarship.

If there are any questions about my admission process. Please, contact me at any time.

Yours sincerely,
