“LAST FANTASY”

The future city looms faintly in the distance,
its metal contours reflecting a dim light in the desert twilight.
She stands there, the buildings pale skeletons,
and the rusted footsteps echo silently in the air.

The figure of a warrior gradually appears in the wind,
the weathered linen torn by the gusts, each step crushing time.
On the reflective surfaces,
the faces of the ancient and the future intertwine.

The vines are the threads of time,
coiling around her shoulders, swaying gently.
Her skin, touched by cold metal, is delicate and deadly.
Dark green flickers strangely,
and the cracks in the leather are hidden.

Cowboys weave into dreams, armor glowing faintly.
Silk slides under the armor,
the dream bends, and shattered diamonds sparkle in the gravel.
