

Money

How Halifax customers were “pressured” to pay off their overdrafts early

Our site uses cookies so that we can remember you, understand how you use our site and serve you relevant adverts and content. Click the OK button, to accept cookies on this website. You can change the Cookie Settings by using the link at the bottom of the page. To find out more about cookies visit our Privacy & Cookies Policy.

The i newsletter

News for free thinkers

Enter Your Email

Sign Up

Customers of a major bank say they are being pressured to make overdraft payments they can't afford ahead of a major industry review.

Two customers with Halifax say they have been subject to high pressure tactics and threatened with a debt default, which would impact their future credit score, if they do not clear their overdrafts within the next few months.

Rule changes

Last month, the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA) announced it is considering a ban on fixed overdraft fees and a cap on unarranged overdraft prices. It is part of a wider crackdown on the cost of high-credit that is due to come in within the next year.

In November last year Lloyds Banking Group – which owns the Halifax – overhauled its overdraft fees in response to calls from the FCA, which raised particular concern over sky-high unarranged overdraft charges.

The bank scrapped unarranged fees and introduced a scaled model that saw all customers pay a daily fee of 1p for every £7 that they are overdrawn – which it said would benefit nine out of ten overdraft users.

Lloyds Group would not confirm how many customers are within the 10 per cent that are negatively affected, however i estimates it could be around 730,000 overdraft users.

Our site uses cookies so that we can remember you, understand how you use our site and serve you relevant adverts and content. Click the OK button, to accept cookies on this website. You can change the Cookie Settings by using the link at the bottom of the page. To find out more about cookies visit our Privacy & Cookies Policy.

OK

them both permanently stuck in the red.

“My salary was only £1,500 a month so I was always in my overdraft, always paying fees; but the bank just let me keep increasing it. All I had to do was press my thumb down on a button on the app and ‘boom’ another £100,” Issac says.

On announcing its new fees in July, Lloyds promised to help regular overdraft users, claiming it would work closely with those negatively affected by the change to find lower cost, better long term solutions.

However, after contacting the bank for help in November both Isaac and Carly say they have been heavily pressured to pay off their overdrafts quickly, despite initial income assessments showing they have little to no monthly income spare.

Each has been subject to high pressure tactics that do not appear to comply with FCA guidelines, with the bank warning of credit defaults if they do not pay sums of between £170 and £450 per month to clear their overdrafts.

Pay or default

In January, Issac was informed that a default would be issued against him as he had closed his account and switched to Nationwide. However the call handler said she would personally remove it as ‘a goodwill gesture’ if he cleared his overdraft of more than £2,200 by 30 June.

In Carly's case, she agreed a repayment term of £22 per month in November. However last month she was informed this payment plan is no longer available to her and that from August she will have to pay £170 per month to avoid a credit default.

This is despite no change in Carly's financial circumstances, which are so stretched she is borrowing from another overdraft with Lloyds Bank – where her fees have also doubled – to meet her monthly expenditures. The Halifax was made aware of this in its original assessment in November.

Chartered financial analyst Gary Reynolds believes Halifax is not following a number of guidelines in its treatment of these customers. The rules state a firm must not pressure a customer to repay a debt in a period of time it knows would cause financial difficulty.

“Based on these circumstances, in both cases, I would say Halifax is in breach of the rules. Unless

Our site uses cookies so that we can remember you, understand how you use our site and serve you relevant adverts and content. Click the OK button, to accept cookies on this website. You can change the Cookie Settings by using the link at the bottom of the page. To find out more about cookies visit our Privacy & Cookies Policy.

DIFFICULTIES.”

The regulator also confirmed that credit defaults cannot be applied then removed in the way described to Issac: “lenders do not have discretion to report or remove ‘defaults’ reported to credit reference agencies at will,” it said.

Spike in ombudsman cases

The Financial Ombudsman Service (FOS) also wouldn’t comment on individual cases.

However, it revealed that the number of complaints about overdrafts at the Bank of Scotland (which includes Halifax) rose 75 per cent between 1 November and 31 March 2018 – the period after the fee change – compared with the same period last year.

Overall numbers are small, at just 264 complaints. However those that reach the FOS must first have first been resolved by the bank, meaning these are likely to be more serious.

Neither Issac nor Carly have approached the FOS.

Simpler and fairer

Commenting on the cases, a Lloyds Group spokesperson said that where mistakes had been made, the bank would work to rectify them. However, the spokesperson insisted that the new fee model is “simpler and fairer.”

“By charging 1p for every £7 of overdraft usage, our approach is simple and clear. More than nine in ten borrowers are either better off or unaffected financially by the changes. We would encourage customers with concerns about their finances to contact us about how we can help,” said a Lloyds Group spokesperson.

Our site uses cookies so that we can remember you, understand how you use our site and serve you relevant adverts and content. Click the OK button, to accept cookies on this website. You can change the Cookie Settings by using the link at the bottom of the page. To find out more about cookies visit our Privacy & Cookies Policy.

OK

Many people are unhappy about the Festival of Great Britain proposal

News

Will house prices crash after Brexit? We asked the experts

Comment

Sir Tim Berners Lee is building a 'new internet'

Technology

Lindsay Lohan was punched after trying to 'steal' refugee children - her act was one of pure...

Columnists

Subscribe to the National Newspaper Of The Year

Find out more

Our site uses cookies so that we can remember you, understand how you use our site and serve you relevant adverts and content. Click the OK button, to accept cookies on this website. You can change the Cookie Settings by using the link at the bottom of the page. To find out more about cookies visit our Privacy & Cookies Policy.

OK

Honey

Casinos Will Hate You for Doing This but They Can't Stop You

Hearts of Vegas | Play For Free

51 Stars Who Died And No One Said Anything

Therapy Joker

How to turn your uni digs into a home from home

Promoted by Homebase

Can't Poop? Top Surgeon Shares #1 Technique To Wash Out Your Insides

Gundry MD

Essentials

News

Lifestyle

Sport

Culture

Useful Links

About

Advertise

Contact Us

Subscribe to i

Join Us On

All rights reserved. © 2018 Johnston Publishing Ltd. Cookie Settings Terms and Conditions Privacy and Cookie Policy

2

Our site uses cookies so that we can remember you, understand how you use our site and serve you relevant adverts and content. Click the OK button, to accept cookies on this website. You can change the Cookie Settings by using the link at the bottom of the page. To find out more about cookies visit our Privacy & Cookies Policy.

OK