In 6 months, Metro travellers to get gateway to City rail station

BENGALURU: Namma Metro travellers looking to board outbound trains at the Krantivira Sangolli Rayanna (Bengaluru City) railway station can expect a hassle-free entry as an under-construction bridge connecting the Metro station with the railway station will be ready in six months.

At present, Metro users struggle to navigate their way to the railway station in the absence of signage and directions.

They often depend on fellow passengers or security staff to reach the railway station or trace the unreserved ticket counter.

Ready by 6 months

N S Sridhar Murthy, senior divisional commercial manager, South Western Railway, Bengaluru division, told Deccan Herald that the bridge would be ready in six months as finishing touches were being to it.

Once ready, the bridge will have counter(s) for unreserved and platform tickets, the official added.

The 100-metre-long bridge will connect the foot overbridge on platform number 10 of the railway station with the Metro station located in Okalipuram.

From there, travellers can reach any platform of the railway station.

Difficult to reach station

A security guard at the Metro station said newcomers to Bengaluru often found it difficult to reach the railway station after alighting from Metro. Guiding the travellers is not easy for the security staff either, especially during peak hours.

People coming out of the railway station face a similar problem in reaching the Metro station in the absence of signage. Sudhakar, a regular rail traveller, said the bridge would help first-time visitors to Bengaluru.

Female staff of corporates to be sensitised to sexual harassment laws

Seven firms evince interest in women’s helpline initiative

Meghana Choukkar

BENGALURU: Starting from September, Vanitha Sahayavani (VSV), the women’s helpline and counselling centre, will be conducting workshops and awareness programmes in corporate companies for the benefit of their large women workforce.

The centre, which works out of the office of the Commissioner of Police on Infantry Road, is run by the Bengaluru City Police and NGO Parihar and it receives hundreds of calls everyday on their helpline 1091. “We handle many cases of abuse against working women daily. We felt that it was necessary to give women information about the legal aspect and also train them to face adverse situations,” said Rani Shetty who is in-charge of the centre.

She gave an example of a case in which VSV had intervened. A woman was being sexually harassed in the office by her boss. When she stood up against him, she was humiliated and threatened that unless she handed in her resignation letter, she would not be allowed to leave the office premises. The quick-thinking woman went to the restroom and called up the helpline.

“Immediately, we sent our unit along with women police officers. She was rescued and the boss was taken to the police station,” Shetty said.

Besides female employees, VSV encourages their male colleagues, employers, staff and even their cab drivers to attend the workshop for sensitisation.

Existing laws to protect women from sexual harassment at work, at home and in public will be discussed. The workshops will cover topics such as rape, stalking, eve-teasing, cyber crimes and legal consequences of live-in relationships. VSV is also tying up with self-defence trainers to give basic training for women to be able to protect themselves.

Two-day event

Seven companies with about 1,000 employees each have shown interest in the initiative. Companies can choose the duration of the sessions based on their convenience from one-hour sessions to two-day comprehensive programmes with group activities and practical training.

Surabhi Anantha, a corporate employee said though she has been working for a while now, she does not know the rules to protect women from sexual harassment at the workplace. “I have heard about a helpline but I don’t know the number. We have not had such workshops in my company while I have been here so such an initiative would really be welcome.”

Though VSV has held such workshops before, now they will be conducted on a larger scale. “Women have the right to a safe environment at work and it is the duty of the employer to ensure this,” Shetty added. Workshops will also be conducted in colleges with topics relevant to students being discussed.

Speak Up! Let’s Talk to Our MLA & Corporators!
