

Stalking:

Abby is taking her usual 2-mile walk to school in the morning. She is stopped by an older man that tells her she had to stop and tell her she was beautiful. Abby thinks nothing of the interaction because the man does not seem harmful in any way. She takes the compliment by saying thank you and walks away, and the man does the same. After classes, she walks straight to work at the café a couple blocks from her school. The man comes in again saying that it was a coincidence that he ran into her again. Abby did not want to jump to conclusions, so she continued to give her best customer service laugh and go about her job. Days after, she saw the man again watching her from the other shops in the plaza. It became a reoccurring thing, but she continued to think nothing of it because it is common for people to go to the café every day. She noticed he would wait until she got off work and that was when he left the plaza as well. He came up to her multiple times to try to talk to her. Abby caught on and told him she was uncomfortable. He agreed not to bother her again, but she would still see him around the plaza and her school, watching her. She would ask her friends and coworkers to walk her to work or home. She stopped seeing the man after some months, but she still lives in fear that he is watching her.

Sexual Assault:

Jamie started her summer job with excitement. She was going to work at the grocery store her brother worked at before he went off to college. She came in with her freshly ironed apron ready to work and was greeted by the manager. He walks her through the aisles and then teaches her how to use the cash register. She gets the basic rundown from a more experienced coworker and the manager. After training, the manager leans in close and tells her, "It's all pretty basic, a beautiful young lady like you will get used to it just fine." Jamie gives an awkward laugh. When he walks away, her coworker tells her that he is just flirty like that and that she should get used to it. Jamie brushes it off because she does not want to have anything bother her on the first day. When she comes in the next day, she finds the manager again and he continues to compliment her and getting too close for Jamie's comfort. Jamie tries to keep a distance but throughout training, she notices him get closer and closer. She is confused on whether he does not understand boundaries or is doing it on purpose, so she tells him he cannot get so closer. He tells her to lighten up and she should be flattered by his remarks. Because Jamie understands when a situation is considered sexual harassment, she quits on the spot.

Sexual Assault:

Kai works at a bar in the downtown area. The area has a lot of tourists which he is not fond of, but he makes good tips. Regulars come in often throughout the week, so he knows a couple familiar faces. On a busy Saturday night, a group of women stumble into the bar, clearly having drunk beforehand. They spot Kai first and call him to their booth. He hands the table he was waiting on their drinks and runs over to the group of ladies. He found is flattering they called him sweetheart and handsome, and he thought that if he went along, he would get more tips that night. He got their orders and returned to them within minutes. As he walks away to tend to other booths, he is pulled by one of the ladies. Two of them hold him down and try to caress and kiss him. He gets up immediately, and a coworker a couple tables away comes to the Kai's table. She asks Kai if he's okay, but he does not want to seem weak and stays quiet. His coworker tells the ladies to leave and brings Kai to the backroom to ask if he is okay.

Rape:

Carly just moved into her dorm, excited about being away from home and making new friends in college. She gets settled and runs to the common area to meet her resident advisor and dormmates. Everyone introduces themselves but one person seems to stand out, her RA. After announcements, he walks around the room saying hi to everyone individually. He finally gets to Carly and tell her she can come to him any time if she has any problems. Carly found it sweet because he was a young and good-looking guy that seemed to care about her. One day Carly knocked on his door. She tells him about how she heard her roommate screaming and crying the night before. Apparently, her roommate's boyfriend had went over to their dorm hours before and had locked the door so Carly could not get in. Carly was knocking on the door and asking if her roommate was okay, but everything went quiet. Carly waited outside her room, constantly knocking on the door asking if everything was okay. The next morning, her roommate came out telling her that her boyfriend had forced himself upon her, even though she was drunk and crying. Too traumatized to tell anyone else herself, she asked Carly not to go to the cops but to tell the RA and make sure her soon-to-be ex-boyfriend could no longer get into the building.

Dating/Domestic Violence:

Brandy and Tony had been dating for four months. They had problems here and there with jealousy because Brandy had been cheated on before. Tony was in a fraternity, so he frequented parties and large social events, but Brandy did not like this because she knew there would be a lot of sorority girls present. She would tell Tony to stay home, but he would still go because he had to be present at most of the events to continue being a brother in his frat. He understood that Brandy was hurt before and that her trust is not fully there with him. One night, Tony goes to a party but does not respond to Brandy's "Where are you?" and "Who are you with?" text messages because his phone had run out of battery. After the party, he decides to go to Brandy's place because he knows she is probably making assumptions to what happened that night. She lets him into her apartment and starts yelling at him right off the bat, accusing him of hiding something and sleeping with other girls.
