

You galloped at full speed through your career and reached the finish line...

You woke up on the first day of your retirement, hoping to spend all the time in the world with your horse. You grab their halter and head out to the pasture. Your horse allowed you to capture them, yet you cannot help but notice a lingering sense of reluctance from your horse.

You step your foot into the stirrup and get in the saddle. The two of you ride off into the smiling sun of the trails. You notice that your horse's ears are back the whole ride signaling their displeasure.

Your mind races trying to find an answer. Your eyes well up with tears with the realization that the connection you had to your horse has faded.

You try everything you can think to make your horse happy. But, nothing seems to bring to make those beautiful ears stand up with joy. You untack your horse, release them to the pasture, and head back inside, feeling hopeless in your attempt to bond with your horse.

Don't give up! The Savvy Equestrian can help!

The Savvy Equestrian helps you recreate a strong bond between you and your horse through monthly online courses. Learning how to interpret your horse's needs, and behaviors will help you bridge a joyous interconnection with each other.
