
The 'Unpresidented' times

An administration based on whims, fancies and nascent urgency.

By Suresh Chouksey

On 18th December “the American choice” president-elect Trump tweeted and hence coined a word of his own ‘Unpresidented’.

As personified as your tongue can get sometimes it did give the trolls a chance to make the most out of it in a short time after which the tweet was corrected with ‘unprecedented’. But if you look at it. For what we saw and expected by Trump, unpresidented is what it was going to be. And it did. For the first time, a president’s formal phone calls came into notice. For the first time Inauguration Ceremony had to be photoshopped by the official PR team so as to make it look like a ceremony. Also, not often have we seen protests on the very first day. Neither have twitter been this fun before!

Let us forget the negative hoopla that Donald Trump has gained all the while, the way his administration is working with its belligerent display of out and out aggressive policies and executive orders even with the American’s good ‘Hombres’ is just surreal.

All the inwardly nations and most strikingly Putin’s Russia were given a warmer shake of the hand. The May or May not be government of Theresa May was also cordially accepted. But the world for Mr. Trump should function on this algorithm “the one on right is right and all other are left behind” and that is why came the mishap on immigration policy. You can debate over it being inconsiderate, boorish in nature, The ‘Don’ of States is being finely unequivocal in reality. His claims before the elections and the following actions are speaking the same language. Is it a chaotic cadence to your ears? Sorry, he doesn’t care. Chaos is the part of the plan. It worked on 8th November and the Republicans (not all of them) think it still will.

While Ford and Boeing both have accepted his request(Order!) of shifting their plans of setting up their industries in the neighboring nations to in America now, only time can tell if such protectionist form of the methodology will work in a still global-tending world. For liberals what seems to be a very gloomy period throughout the world; acceptance and patience seem to be the solution.

Today being against Trump be it Media or Democrats in the house works unhindered for the President and his team. Credit goes to Chief strategist Stephen Bannon whose wand over the last 6 months has resulted in all the dissatisfied angry chunk of the super power taking animosity against their ruler as a reflection of something good being done by the White House people.

For the very first time insurgency is working in a positive manner for an administration of a nation that used to take Individual's right, Global Warming, Bilateral relations, International liberalism in a strategic if not thoughtful manner.

Maybe Trump and the team are forgetting that 'quid pro quo' doesn't work with every other nation out there. Nor can you single out each country to work with them as per your fancies.

All the projections today give it a look of a decisive, resolute administration which still is working on a unique geopolitical order which makes you wonder if it is the United States or a bad dream?

For me, it's all UNPRESIDENTED.
