Global wind turbine maintenance company Boston Energy will make the Cambridge Innovation Center its center of U.S. operations, Commerce Rhode Island announced in a statement. The move will create more than 50 jobs in Rhode Island.

"This development is further proof that we're well-positioned to be the hub for this growing industry as we approach our renewable energy goal," said Gov. Gina Raimondo. Clean energy jobs are jobs of tomorrow, and I'm thrilled that yet another company in the wind sector supply chain is choosing to make the Ocean State home."

Boston Energy President and CEO Mark Parkes explained why the state was attractive home for the company.

"The geographical location and support offered by Governor Raimondo, Commerce Secretary Pryor and their teams has been critical to our decision in locating our US Headquarters in Providence," he explained. "This will allow Boston Energy Wind Power Services to support the impending offshore wind energy industry right along the North Eastern seaboard."
