

Life can be a dream

Finding the perfect mattress for that all-elusive 'perfect sleep' can often feel like an exercise in futility. With so much stress placed on us worrying about our jobs, the environment and the economy, it's a wonder we get any rapid eye movement at all. It seems you'd have to employ NASA to develop a mattress worthy of the supreme snooze. Thankfully, Gainsville Furniture has done just that. Well, almost.

The Mem-Tech Memory Foam Mattress is made from 'visco-elastic' polyurethane foam developed by NASA in 1966 to reduce G-Force on astronauts during takeoff. In its present form, this high-density material reacts to body heat, allowing it to mold to every hip, shoulder and knee for natural spinal positioning and uninterrupted rest.

Recommended by thousands of doctors, chiropractors and physical therapists worldwide, this pleasure plane may even save your marriage. The Mem-Tech foam doesn't ebb and flow like the tides when your partner gets up for a midnight snack. Instead, you are kept cupped in your own peaceful domain on the best sleep system modern technology has to offer.

As smart as a memory foam mattress is, you'll want to look your best while strewn across it, and family-owned Gainsville will not disappoint. With a range of designer leather beds, you can have the brains and the looks. These uniquely-shaped creations are designed with your dream home in mind, giving your bedroom style and class not to be hidden behind closed doors.

With seven models to choose from and a price as attractive as the product, it's time to get to one of the two giant showrooms for your piece of bedroom art.

At the Eureka showroom in Southbank 2,400/sqm of floorspace showcases a myriad lounge, bedroom and dining packages from the Gainsville range, but they don't stop there. In aid of choosing your perfect home design, they also feature the wares of like-minded suppliers to best suit your architectural, design and artistic tastes, giving you all the resources you need to make the most informed decisions.
