PRESENTED BY
GONNA NEED MILK

Welcome to The Forkcast—our weekly meal planning newsletter with five Food52 recipes, a grocery list, and tips to take the guesswork out of cooking. This week's lineup comes from creator, home cook, and mother Typhanie Stewart.

Getting back into a routine is challenging enough. I love to make nutritious one-pan meals during the week to save time and make cleanup easier. And, with some recipes that include dairy milk, my kids get an extra boost of protein to help keep them full and energized. Here are my suggestions for a great midweek meal plan (and watch me bring some of them to life here).

5 one-pan recipes for back-to-school season.

The SUNDAY RESET

Welcome to Sunday Reset, where we share how we're unwinding and what we have planned for the week ahead. This time, our editor, Julia, is reminiscing about state fair eats.

One summer, I lived in Iowa, and to this day, three things still linger on my food-editing mind:

1. Casey's breakfast pizza (yes, gas station pizza—and yes, you should absolutely try it).
2. Des Moines Farmers Market—hands down the best I've ever been to, and the only thing that could get me out of bed early on a Saturday.
3. The Iowa State Fair.

As someone not from the state, I didn't quite understand just how big the fair was. The office would host themed parties and happy hours to celebrate its Festival fare to savor at home.

Funnel cake, corn dogs, and more Test Kitchen twists you'll want to try.

FOOD52

Welcome to Come On Over, a Food52 newsletter about hosting life's big and little moments. It's where we share our personal tips and tricks, from modern-day etiquette—shoes off or shoes on?—to making extra seating out of every surface of an apartment. This week, Kelly's focusing on taking a break—with a bit of prep.

Has this summer felt hectic to anyone

Hosting your own wellness morning.

Sometimes, the break you need takes a little prep work.
