

In the process of starting to write everyone presents their first difficulties and facilities, for example, tiredness, many careless errors or even the lack of confidence.

When I started writing I remember that I was used to getting stuck all the time and I was unable to write anything about any topic. Because of this, I was unable to start writing my paper, much less finish it. Nowadays, I feel like as I research more it will help me to find an angle that I'm going to be interested in exploring, analyzing and discussing.

One difficulty that I have until today is the lack of inspiration. I tend to have problems finding ideas for my essays, and that's why I believe that portfolio idea that my teacher had is going to help me a lot with this process because it may help in identifying a problem early on and developing effective strategies for me.

Facilities are very easy to explore. I feel like I know the basics of grammar, and I tend to revise my texts a lot, and I have done that since I was younger because I was very insecure, and I kept revising for so long and editing things out.

It's important to remember that many children, adolescents and adults make mistakes or experience problems as part of the process of becoming better writers.
