
How I Survive Each Semester Illustrated By Doctor Who

Eleven Stages of my Average Semester

As we are nearing the end of another semester, I'm sure all of us college students are going through a plethora of emotions. From the excitement of starting a class you've been longing to take to the final relief at the end of a long, hard semester, Peter Capaldi's Doctor captures my rollercoaster of emotions. As he is starring in his final season in Doctor Who, what better way to commemorate this crazy semester and show his character some love. Here's how most of my semesters tend to go:

Yay! This new class is going to be awesome! I always start each semester with enthusiasm and renewed vigor. Each new class gives me a fresh start to improve myself and study skills.

2. Confidence

(<http://gph.is/2nmzoKw>)

After looking over the syllabus, my confidence grows. I feel like I can blast through this class with no problems. I start to feel at ease once I review the syllabus (well, usually) and begin to mentally prepare for the workload.

3. Procrastination

(<http://gph.is/1OUY6uw>)

This class is a piece of cake. I have time to goof off and play! I can do these assignments quickly. Ah, the bad habits start to begin. Time management goes out the window. I have time to play that game or binge some Netflix.

4. Surprise

(<http://gph.is/2eMIqw5>)

Uhhh, where did this assignment come from? Did I miss something on the syllabus? Oh man, my habit of skimming the syllabus bites me again! I missed the fine print again.

5. Disbelief

(<http://gph.is/1qB34hU>)

How many points for an A? All that procrastinating and goofing off is starting to show. Oh no! What am I gonna do? I start looking at my overall points, and the panic begins. Ok, if I do perfectly on the rest of the assignments, I just might pull this off. Almost always the bargaining begins here.

6. Regroup

(<http://gph.is/1Ji5Z64>)

I read through the syllabus more closely. Dang! Where did that paper come from? Ok, calm down and think! I start to form a plan in my weak attempts to calm myself down.

7. Frustration

(<http://gph.is/WdiyQ1>)

#$%&*@ I have to start on this paper now! Time to research! Time to plan! Must focus! (Insert frenzied work here.) I am really quite hard on myself for missing details or procrastinating. My frustration level usually soars now.

8. Exhaustion

(<http://gph.is/1Ji6gG7>)

So...much...writing. I'm only halfway through my final? So tired...so very tired. Must stay energized. Where's my coffee?

9. Relief

(<http://gph.is/2nmEhTJ>)

Yes! The final paper turned in! It's good, isn't it?! It is! I hope! Please! The relief of getting that big paper in feels amazing, but I also feel a bit neurotic with the quality of the paper. Procrastination is my enemy.

10. Reassurance

(<http://gph.is/2lv2A1b>)

After reading through my final one last time and reviewing my grades again, my confidence comes back. I can conquer this class!

11. Celebration

(<http://gph.is/1TSzDpS>)

Yes! My final grade posted! Sweet, an A. I will never procrastinate like this again. (Repeat number 1.) Well, I do try not to procrastinate. Hopefully, next class, I'll behave a bit better.

Moving into a dorm your first year of college can be very intimidating. You've seen the movies, you've talked to your older friends, but you're still a little nervous. We all were a little nervous moving in our first year, anyone who says otherwise is lying. The movies aren't entirely accurate, especially when it comes to the RAs. Here's a list to help guide you a little when moving into a residence hall your freshman year, and here's exactly what to expect from your RA.

These are seriously helpful hints from a previous RA if you know these things going in your freshman

It's the end of August, which means it's almost move-in day for most colleges. My freshman year, I remember not wanting to spend a lot of time decorating my room, but I also wanted it to look nice. Here are five ways I managed to make my room look amazing in a quick and easy way!

1. Pillows
