

NUMBERS DON'T LIE.

Math is the language of the universe, and there's no debating it. That's what makes it so beautiful. The order of it. The truth of it. From Aristotle to now, it's the bedrock of all philosophy and the father of modern science: things are either true or they're not. You either get results, or you don't.

And you just can't argue with results.

That's what we care about: Results. Good ones. The best. We accept nothing less. And we don't just test, we invest in testing. Our commitment to quality control is so rigorous that our Quality Control (QC) will tenaciously QC themselves. When the rest of us are on holiday, they are running the numbers on the numbers. When they see the industry standard says a maximum of 10 ppm, then they knock it down to 5. By their account, to merely meet standards is to fail them. Their goal is to always exceed any standard, any goal. No exceptions.

And we don't argue; they get results.

They keep everything in perfect order. They have absolute dominion over their universe, and it... is... beautiful. After all, the math is on their side.

And numbers don't lie.
