Prejudice in the media's exploitation: The White History of the Elite Sport of Tennis

46.2% of tennis players are black and only 6.8% of players are women. Black women in the sport of tennis are the most racially profiled and discriminated against due to the media's exploitation and the prejudice of their racial backgrounds. In order for them to stop experiencing the racism and sexism that is present to this day, the role of the media needs to be shifted to their success as an athlete and the exploitation differences against white players.

Racism and discrimination plays a crucial role in the lives of millions, but studying the particular effects helps learners become more educated and aware of what people of color may endure. In this paper I will explain the racist history of the sport of tennis that made it extremely difficult
