Dominique, Misha, Sarah, and Greta all work together in running a women's shelter. One of the women at the shelter gets killed by her ex husband, and the four friends decide they have had enough. Their grief, sorrow and anger guides them. When Dominique decides to take justice into her own hands, things change, not only in her life but it in the life of all the women. They decide to learn how to defend themselves so that if it were to happen again at the very least they have something that might help.

This is a great introduction to what promises to be a great series. We don't immediately see the women as avenging nuns yet but we get their background on why they decide to become who they will be. Each one of them has lost a child to domestic violence and the guilty party got away each time. No wonder they want revenge and justice. It will be a great story I am sure.

What I also like is the diversity of the women who are bound together by their need to right wrongs and by the painful events in their past.

The art is powerful, evocative and very engaging. Everything you want a comic of this standard to be. I have to say I am eagerly awaiting to read the rest of this series. And I am sure many out there feel just the same. It is nice for once to see women stepping out of the shadows and taking action for what has happened in their pasts. The topic of domestic abuse is a strong one, and one that deserves the light of day. Every one of us has dreamed of handing out justice to our bullies, tormentors and abusers. I am sure Sisters of Sorrow will be cathartic for many.
