Frequently Asked Questions About AI Dispute Resolution

Get answers to common questions about our online dispute resolution platform

How does AI-powered dispute resolution work without hearings or phone calls?

DRai's dispute resolution platform uses a completely document-based process. Both parties submit their contract, supporting documents, and written positions through our secure platform. Our AI analyzes all submitted materials, identifies key issues, assesses contract terms, and provides intelligent recommendations. The process is asynchronous, allowing parties to respond on their own schedule without coordinating meetings or hearings, making it faster and more cost-effective than traditional dispute resolution methods.

What types of contract disputes can be resolved using this platform?

Our platform handles a wide range of commercial contract disputes including breach of contract claims, payment disputes, service delivery disagreements, vendor contract issues, employment contract disputes, partnership disagreements, and intellectual property licensing conflicts. The system is particularly effective for business-to-business disputes where both parties want to preserve their relationship while resolving the immediate issue.

How long does the AI-powered dispute resolution process typically take?

Most disputes are resolved within 2-4 weeks, compared to 6-18 months for traditional litigation. The timeline depends on dispute complexity and party responsiveness. Our AI provides initial analysis within 24-48 hours of document submission. The asynchronous, document-only process eliminates scheduling delays and allows parties to move at their own pace while maintaining momentum toward resolution.

Is the dispute resolution process legally binding and enforceable?

Yes, when both parties agree to the resolution terms, we generate a legally binding settlement agreement. The platform can facilitate both binding arbitration (under the Federal Arbitration Act) and non-binding mediation, depending on your preference and contract terms. All agreements include proper legal language and can be enforced in court if necessary. We also provide comprehensive documentation of the entire process for use in any future proceedings.

How much does AI dispute resolution cost compared to litigation?

Our platform typically costs 70-90% less than traditional litigation or arbitration. While litigation can cost $50,000-$500,000+ depending on complexity, our platform fees are based on dispute value and complexity, typically ranging from $2,500-$25,000. You avoid attorney hourly rates (often $300-$800/hour), expert witness fees, court costs, and discovery expenses. Most clients see ROI within the first dispute resolution.

How does the platform ensure confidentiality and data security?

All dispute information is protected by enterprise-grade security including end-to-end encryption (AES-256), SOC 2 Type II compliance, role-based access controls, and comprehensive audit trails. All parties sign confidentiality agreements, and documents are never used for any purpose outside the specific dispute. We offer on-premise deployment for organizations with strict data sovereignty requirements. Your dispute information remains completely private and secure.
