

Best Places to Hide Your Money

Even though you may want your money to be guarded by robots in a highly secure bank, it doesn't seem too possible to make that happen. Then, you might have to just stick with the primitive ways of protecting your money in your home. So what are the best places in a house for you to hide the money to prevent it from getting stolen?

One of the first places one can think of when someone asks: "Where is the safest place for my money?" is of course under the mattress. Under the mattress of your bed is the classic spot to keep some of your savings. There are a few ways to use a mattress as a bank account. You might choose to cut a part of the mattress and put the money inside it. You shouldn't forget to sew it after though, so it wouldn't show. Because there is a downside to it being an obvious choice to hide money: It is the first place where a thief will look. Therefore you might need some other options to surprise the stealer.

Here is another idea for you: A secret pocket. Unfortunately, this doesn't come readily when you buy an outfit. You should be the one who cuts and opens a hidden part in your dress. Firstly get something to cut the lining of your dress and put the money there. There you have a secret pocket of your own at your service. Again don't forget to sew it back, so your money wouldn't keep falling outside, and you should choose an outfit that you don't wear too often because it is not a good idea to forget you have a certain amount of money sewn inside your clothing and walk around the block with it.

I'm sure you have heard about the infamous money hiding spot: The reservoir. For this one, it is important to wrap the money well in a way that it would be impossible for it to get wet. You may want to consider using multiple nylon bags and plastic wraps. There is a risk of soaking your money accidentally, but there might be an advantage that, if the thief is not too needy, he might think it won't be worth sticking his hand into your flush tank.

One more fitting spot in your house to hide some money could be the inside of the dresser, or to be more specific it could be the drawer of your dresser. You might find it is an easy place to think of, and it could be the case if you openly put your money inside of your sock drawer. Instead of that, what you can do is put the money you own in an envelope and glue the envelope under the drawer.

Next time you eat and finish a canned food don't throw the empty can right away. Instead, try to turn the food can into a safe. After you fill it with your money you need to find a proper place to keep it hence, it wouldn't draw any attention. One place you can keep your cane safe is the refrigerator or the freezer. Your money might be cold however, it will be safe. And if you don't want to keep it in the freezer, you can do the same with the kitchen cabinets. As long as it seems like it still has food in it.

Hiding your money partially between the book pages could especially work for you if you have a spacious library as a large one might make it harder to figure out which of the books contains the money. The joy you can have after some money falls out from the book peculiarly when you forget that you stashed them can be on another level.

It is not the only way of using a book as a safe either. If you want to use a more improved strategy, you can try to carve a book and place the money inside of it after that. In this approach, it is possible to hide much more money as well.

For a more nonapparent hideaway, a fake power outlet could be considered. All you have to do is buy an electrical socket that matches the real ones in your house in color so it won't expose itself.

Although these are practical, free, and can be useful up to a point, the best way to secure your money in a house is certainly using a safe deposit. The fill material of your money box should definitely be concrete then it won't be too easy to tear up. Secondly, it is highly significant for the safe you are going to buy to have a security and fire certificate. Along with it, there is also emplacing the steel safe. One convenient ground for this is the closet. If your case has an erection opening, you can install it on the wall or immobilize it to the ground.

All things said and done it should be established that these ways are only optional when you have money to keep safe. If you do, make sure you find exceptional tactics to prevent them from possible thievery.
