

DESIGNER SPOTLIGHT

THE CONDÉ NAST FASHION CLOSET by CARRIER AND COMPANY

Continuing a 20-year-long working relationship with Anna Wintour, Jesse Carrier and Mara Miller were entrusted by the Condé Nast global chief content officer and Vogue editor in chief to redesign the storied Condé Nast Fashion Closet – otherwise known as the global epicenter of fashion, celebrity, and media (and the walk-in closet of our collective dreams).

A walk-in closet, the Wintour way.

To bring brand identity (and vitality) into boardrooms in New York City's One World Trade Center, the designers applied their contemporary yet timeless aesthetic to Wintour's love of layered color, pattern, and art – then gave it a global spin.

Get the Look

“It recalls the era of glamorous department store dressing rooms, when it wasn’t just about trying on the garment, but about being immersed in an environment – and stepping into a character.”

– JESSE CARRIER

The closet's exact elements (for exacting style).

“The feel is romantic and relaxed, with a found quality and a bit of a modern edge.”

– MARA MILLER

A hardworking space (that plays hard too).

Because the closet is often host to special events (and VIPs with entourage in tow), Jesse and Mara gave special consideration to functionality. Most pieces, including a 10-foot-long wood trestle table, have casters for easy repositioning with a little scoot across low-pile area rugs. Bookcases double as display and storage for designer stilettoes, while patterned curtains impart privacy and drama to dressing rooms.
